DASHING STYLES SHOWN IN SPORTSWEAR

KNITTED FABRICS STYLISH

Wide Range of Gay Colors Add to Trim Gayety of Sports Costumes

THE very first snowstorm of the season affects deeply the Winter schedule of women in their social and athletic activities. Snow and ice in the grime of the city turn thoughts to the beauty and the lure of the snow fields, and sportsmen and sportswomen have a way of dropping everything to prepare for a plunge into the gayety of the country sports long before the regular season of Winter sports opens at the fashionable resorts.

All of this change of scene requires a change, in fact, many changes, in wardrobe. And because the inspiration almost always comes suddenly, the equipment is usually got together quickly. Interest in ball gowns, elaborate costumes for afternoon and evening affairs, for wraps, for lingerie and all the other items of elegance is dimmed for a moment by the smart outfit presented by the designers and dealers in the better class of sportswear. With the creators of both contingent it is the sports dress for Americans that counts vitally in their work. European women and their likes are more easily interpreted. Americans are becoming more and more individual and independent, and the satisfying of personal taste and selection is not always a simple matter. But the accomplishment is worth while, and the distinction with which American women wear this type of dress is in itself compensation.

Next to the conventional tailleur, nothing is more flattering to the athletic woman than sports things—naïve, colorful, dashing and trim. It is becoming to many who ordinarily wear an utterly different type of dress but who find the utmost comfort and satisfaction in this sort of costuming.

A SNOWSTORM, with all of its human aspects, is old-fashioned, but the sports skirts and styles in sports clothes are fashionable to the minute. Every phase that has been presented in the last few years, really ever since the Winter sports season became a part of the social routine, is being renewed and varied, with here and there an absolute novelty.

Skirts have held their own in the mode, in countless variants, but always with certain practical limitations. They have been side pleated, box pleated, wrap-around and plain—always short and of some substantial material such as corduroy, whipcord, cheviot, tweed, even of leather. The rest of the costume has consisted of a shirt or sweater and coat, or a jumper and short over-jacket. From a rather nondescript suit of this kind, in which women who go in for sports have long made their appearance, some distinctly smart styles have been brought out, snappy affairs of as much relative importance as the most delicate gown made for town wear. The very best designers, both French and American, have done things that intrigue the fancy of women who are both active in Winter sports and as spectators. These are taken into account by the couturiers, who add to their collection of skating, skiing, snowboeing and tobogganing the "spectators" costume.

THE spectators' dress in snow and ice festivities corresponds, in a way, to the dress one would wear in the gallery at tennis, polo or golf, and offers to the designer opportunity for greater variety and this season a more feminine type of dress, even in the sports type. This seems to have stimulated the keenest interest and inspiration among the French couturiers, who are sending over delightful models.

Knitted fabrics are conspicuously smart and have an especial appeal because of their supple quality and ease. Jenny is the author of a fascinating little sports ensemble all in gray. The one-piece frock and short coat are of soft gray knitted wool with gray kid in a darker shade forming a band several inches deep about the bottom of the skirt, a narrow collar, a belt and cuff bands finished like straps. With this is worn a felt sports hat with the stylish soft rippling brim, gray woolen stockings and gray buckskin shoes with thick soles and low rubber heels. In this and in most of the sports suits coming from the other side, leather is introduced conspicuously as a novel note and a serviceable detail. In some of the smartest designs leather forms the larger part of the frock and coat, in combination with woolen fabrics, corduroy and velour. For example, one of the most chic among the skating suit models is made of flexible navy blue leather, which forms the one-piece dress, with long coat blouse effect, having a front panel and coat revers of blue and red wool plaid.

LEATHER and hides are effectively introduced in spectators' coats as well as sports suits. A swagger topcoat, cut knee length and rather full, is all of leather, in navy blue with a lining of blue and tan wool. A new sleeve is illustrated in this model—one that has a cluster of three pleats on top and a closely buttoned strap at the wrist. The coat is belted at a line slightly lower than the normal waist with a narrow buckled strap of the leather. Another spectator coat of brown cheviot has outside pockets and upstanding collar, cuff straps and belt of brown and white calfskin. Varying the usual leather model is one from Martial et Armand, a three-piece suit, in which the straight waistcoat is made of chamois colored suede with a short, lap-over skirt of brown corduroy. The coat, finger-tip length, is made of the corduroy and has a collar and cuffs of fitch in exceptionally lovely shades of brown and cream. This suit is especially good for skating, because there are with it short knickers of the tan suede. Several of the models from American designers are done in tweed or other wool material, with waistcoat and hat of one sort of leather, calfskin or suede. Suede jackets are shown with tweed or corduroy separate skirts, some in one color, more in contrasting colors. One among these is a skating costume in which the skirt is made of a diagonal cheviot cut with a flare to give more freedom to the limbs, and a belted jacket of capeskin, which is the latest variant of the leather coat. Several chic sports suits of cloth are banded and in different ways trimmed with leather. In some the leather is of contrasting color cut out in ornamental patterns and stiched on the cloth, plain, or appliquéd with needlework.

Fancy neckwear is being exploited by some of the shops. Collars and frills made to fit a neck of any shape are being shown in organdie, linen, satin and in metal cloth, which is a distinctly American style. A Frenchwoman's idea of the neck finish of a frock is white—mousseline, lace, net, georgette or chiffon.

The Model at the Right Is a One-Piece Frock of Bottle Green Wool Crepe With Coat of Natural Pigskin Lined With Wool Plaid in Tan and Green.

Centre: A Gay Striped Sweater in Scarlet, Black and White Angora With White Suede Trousers.

EXTRA TOUCHES FOR THE SEASON

ALTHOUGH handkerchiefs were for some time regarded as a last-minute gift, such is far from being the case this season. They are especially important, due to their relation to the general color scheme of costumes. Fancy prints, effective borders in single colors, candy striped borders and all-over plaids vie for favor. The monotones are particularly effective, where the border is much deeper than the centre, which usually fades out into a faint tint of the original color. Rolled hems take precedence over the hemstitched, even where the handkerchiefs are all white.

In the white handkerchiefs more attention is paid to the hand work, especially in those having appliquéd borders, corner motifs, and handdrawn designs. French knots are interspersed in the corners of the colored and white ones alike. Monograms are so varied that in a box of six handkerchiefs, no two will be exactly alike or of the same size.

DESPITE all the gayety displayed in the many colorful evening frocks so far this season, Paris now advances the dictum that black flowers are chic, and so no costume is really complete without one of them. Fortunately, the choice is varied and includes the frailest as well as the most sturdy looking gardenia. Chiffon carnations in such sizes that they form a cloud on the shoulder are decidedly becoming on any of the pastel evening dresses. Velvet gardenia, roses and petal flowers are worn where a decided touch of black is required to tone down a too vivid color.

Mistletoe boutonnières, with silver stems and green leaves, touched with silver, complete a lovely color scheme when the berries are interpreted by pearls. These little perky bunches of loveliness add a touch of color to a velvet evening dress or enhance the silvery effect of the lamé and metal brocades.

THIS tailored type of negligee is not only for the woman who goes in for sports clothes, for its comfort, convenience and good looks appeal to many women. For other styles all of the beautiful fabrics brought out this season are shown. The metal brocades make the most stunning negligees. Some of these are on lines so simple that they are obviously intended for the boudoir, to be drawn over the night gown or pajamas. They are really like gorgeous plumage, in the most enchanting colors interwoven with gilt and silver. These fabrics are far more delicate and flexible than the metal brocades of last year, and the robes of which they are made have no trimming, but are finished in many effective ways. In one particularly handsome model a straight garment that suggests a Mandarin coat is made of metal brocade—green, with flashes of blue, and silver. All about the coat and the wide straight sleeves is added a band of green chiffon.

Variety of Novel Things in Marcasite Work Offered for the Holidays

DURING the past few seasons Paris has beheld the return to favor of marcasite work in some form or other. Only now, however, has it become recognized as having some authentical style value. The coming Palm Beach season will see it used as embellishment as well as in all that the ambiguous term "novelty jewelry" implies. Just a glimpse at any of the latest importations should be sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its wide possibilities for purposes of adornment. The collections include hat ornaments, brooches, bracelets, earrings, pendants, rings, bag clasps and the like. Designs vary from simple border effects to more elaborate solid settings that show the introduction of crystals and other semi-precious stones.

One pin of unusual grace, that could be used on either hat or dress, is made of two clear crystal stones. They are faceted in border form, and being slightly oblong make the pin just a good size for either of the above mentioned purposes. Being set in a pan-like mounting and held in place by very tiny claws of the silver, more attention is focused on the fine marcasite scroll work adorning the upper edge and the two short sides of the pin. Other pins of varying sizes also mounted on silver depict conventional and floral designs. In the case of solid settings of marcasite the designs are carried out by the clever adaptation of the metal in various sizes. Some pieces appear scarcely larger than a pin head.

RINGS show the marcasite work in subtle designs and in most cases with large centre stones. The deep rich coloring and varied tones of lapis, jade and cornelian seem to blend well and are preferred to crystal. By the same token these may be worn without conflict, the color of the stone governing the choice. Enamel work in conventional motifs is another way of adding variety to the possibilities of marcasite work. When used in rings, the finest kind of work is required to either outline a design or break it up in interesting sections.

Some of the new bracelets seem to be departing from the large proportions seen earlier, and appear in smaller and smaller sizes. Small, dainty links of finely chased silver alternate with those set in marcasite. When a touch of color is required it is introduced in gayly colored links, occasionally set with bits of the marcasite.

Earrings combine crystal, onyx, jet and the colored imitation precious stones in both the button and drop types. In all, however, the mounting is of silver and the workmanship very fine. The pendant drops, too, show this same type of work and now include many of the fob type in solid or openwork designs.

Bag clasps and motifs usually follow the popular brooch or dress pin sizes and shapes—that is, the somewhat square and oblong shapes. But contrasting with both, more color is used, especially when they are to adorn any of the bags in black, navy or dark brown.

FASCIST FASHIONS.

AN interesting exhibition of feminine fashion as prescribed by Mussolini was recently made in Paris by an accomplished Italian painter, who was displaying a number of her pictures in a salon. She wore a cream colored dress, somewhat resembling a classical toga. It reached to the floor and had elbow-length sleeves. Her hair was bound with yellow silk ribbons. From her ears hung heavy amber pendants, and a long chain of amber beads was about her neck. The fashion journals of Paris commented upon it is "picturesque for the movies," but unsuited to actual use in modern life.

PARIS GLOWS IN WINE RED

Holiday Window Displays Attract the Shopper With Warm Colors

PARIS.

WINE-RED shades, that glow from all those Paris windows devoted to gift suggestions for the feminine Christmas, are lending an unusually appropriate touch of festivity for the holiday season which centres in France about New Year's Day rather than Noël, since France bestows her gifts at New Year's. Cheerful red on every side, a little green and the dazzling white blaze of the jeweler's windows along the Rue de la Paix, all contribute to a thrilling and joyous holiday setting.

Whole windows of umbrellas in the various wine shades have appeared in the last few days. These are the usual short, stubby models, but rarely have the borders that are seen on other colors. Of plain red silk, they have fat handles also of plain red in composition materials.

In other shades the borders are all important. An expensive brown silk umbrella has a narrow facing of plain beige; a dark green taffeta border encroaches so deeply on its foundation of navy blue that the navy blue becomes only a foot-deep centre. Plaids overrun the entire umbrella, but stripes remain discreetly on the border line.

VARIOUS wholly Parisian novelties have been introduced as handles on these new umbrellas, ranging from miniature carved animal heads to culminate, for impractibility, in real stuffed birds' heads wearing their original plumage. One wonders just how long these feathered heads would remain unruffled when carried upside down.

Wine-red suede or glacé leather makes the newest handbags, capacious, flat bellow bags, usually rectangular and with strap handles. These cheerful bags, worn with the red umbrella and a red hat or perhaps only a red pin in a dark hat, seem to make bright the rainiest day and the most sombre rainy-day costume.

The zipper closing retains its popularity both for the large, flat, handled bags and for the little, round, barrel affairs, and the leathers are as extravagantly varied and as cunningly combined as they have been lately on shoes. Suede, serpent skin, pin seal, kangaroo, calf hide with the hair left on, alligator and pigskin are only a few of the leathers one encounters among these purses.

Among the more elaborate purses for afternoon, various new modes sewn to a jaw frame of precious metal have little compartments built into either side of the metal top, one side opening to disclose a place for cigarettes and matches and the other holding the inevitable vanity articles.

IMITATION diamonds of rock crystal or white sapphires are in a fair way to become as unabashedly good form as artificial pearls have become. The wide bracelet of diamonds, when possible, or of rhinestones almost as acceptably when diamonds are out of the question, has become an indispensable adjunct to the afternoon and evening toilette of the well-dressed Parisienne. When first introduced, these bracelets were solidly paved with brilliants with a pattern in enamel or colored stones imposed upon this shimmering surface. Now this style is sharing honors with bracelets made in the ordinary manner—with the brilliants merely accenting the intricacies of the pierced metal foundation. The glitter's the thing.

Paris adds distinction to the inexpensive gift by embroidering both handkerchiefs and notepaper with a monogram done in cutwork. The handkerchiefs, of finest white linen with plaid borders and rolled hems, have the monograms done with thread in the darkest shade of the plaid border. The stationery has its cut-out monogram stamped in imitation of embroidery, done in the shade with which the envelopes are lined.

Winter is Summer—

And all the World's Right at Florida's Most Beautiful Hotel

THOUGH the calendar says it is bleak winter, sun and thermometer down at Hollywood Beach Hotel declare it is June—and prove it. Dancing sunlight, warm surf, outdoor sport, and summer togs banish all vestige of winter to the North.

Come on down to summerland; Hollywood Beach Hotel invites you. You live gloriously in the midst of comfort and refinement at a cost no more than at a good class northern hotel.

On the coral shore between Palm Beach and Miami, right at the water's edge of the ocean, Florida's most beautiful hotel abounds with charm and gay life. Your window opens on the emerald sweep of the Atlantic. Sixty seconds from your room in your bathing suit to a plunge in the surf.

Within and without the gorgeous beauty of the hotel entrances. Novel decorations, luxury and convenience everywhere conspire to captivate you, and make you feel content. Fine cuisine with fresh vegetables, fruit, milk, butter, eggs and poultry from the farms of the hotel make your appetite a daily joy.

All recreations and sports of seaside and country club from which to pick and choose. Golf on a well tended interesting eighteen hole course, horseback riding, tennis, motor-boating aquaplaning. Down the beach from the finest bathing casino on the coast; just off shore, a famous fishing ground of tarpon and sailfish. At night social gayety, dancing, concerts, and musical recitals.

Motor buses leave regularly for Palm Beach, Miami, and the race tracks—you can lunch at the hotel and attend the races. It's real summer here. No chilly days. The sun always genial—the surf warm and invigorating.

Trade the prison of a winter-bound house for a life of gay summer freedom. Let the warm caress of spring thrill you. You pay no premium for it at Hollywood Beach Hotel. You live in Florida, and enjoy its climate at a low cost that amazes you. Catch up with the sun—at Hollywood Beach Hotel.

PERSONAL SERVICE: To facilitate reservations and assure the convenience and comfort of a trip to Florida, the Hollywood Beach Hotel maintains a New York office. Here you obtain complete description of rooms and suites, and their rates. Through it you may make all arrangements for a Florida visit including transportation on railroad or steamship. Any information on Florida you require will be furnished promptly, Call, or telephone, or write. Every inquiry receives individual personal attention. Before you decide where you winter, send for our colorful libretto, "Florida's Most Beautiful Hotel."

Briarcliff Manor, N. Y.

is patronized by those who know and appreciate the best

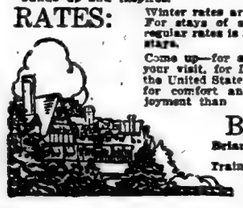
REST—The location assures it. QUIET—In our own park of 300 acres. FOOD—The best the market affords. WATER—The famous Briarcliff water. AIR—600 feet elevation—ideal. VIEW—Overlooking the Hudson River and Ramapo Mountains.

LOCATION—32 miles from New York and one is far away from the restlessness, noise and dirt of a city that exhausts—to the repose, comfort and ease of a civilization that builds up and inspires.

VERANDAS—They surround the hotel, insuring fresh air and a walk regardless of the weather.

SPORTS FACILITIES—Every sport in season.

RATES: Winter rates are effective from November 1st to May 1st. For stays of a week or longer, a 50% reduction from regular rates is made—Corresponding reductions for shorter stays.



Come up—for a day, a week or longer. You will enjoy your visit, for I frankly believe that there is no hotel in the United States that combines more pleasingly the factors for comfort and recreation that add to a guest's enjoyment than

S. S. RESOLUTE—WORLD CRUISE
Sailing Eastward from New York, January 6, 1927

Take each point of this RESOLUTE World Cruise. Study it carefully and you will find that no cruise has ever been offered American travelers that surpasses it.

The Itinerary
25 Countries—59 Ports and Cities. Each one strange and fascinating—a striking contrast to our own land. Besides the usual Oriental Ports and Cities—Siam, Borneo and Formosa are also visited. The shore excursions included in the fare are extraordinary—their completeness will prove a most pleasant surprise.

The Ship
Travelers who have been on other cruises, and by their experience are qualified to judge the merits of a ship, declare the RESOLUTE the "Queen of Cruising Steamers". Designed for tropical service and with luxurious appointments throughout, she represents the perfection of cruising comfort.

The Personnel
A cruise staff, ship's officers and crew who, because of the experience gained on their former world cruises, are able to anticipate and perform those little niceties of service which contribute so much to the comfort and pleasure of every passenger. The same efficient management aboard ship and ashore.

THESE children have The Book of Knowledge in their home. It is a delight to them every moment of the day, and is turning their eager curiosity into important knowledge. Their teacher will tell you they give her clear and intelligent answers. They have made a long start in the race for knowledge.

Beginning with the Wonder Questions they go from one to another of the 18 story-like departments of The Book of Knowledge: Familiar Things, The Earth, Animal Life, Plant Life, Our Own Life, Things to Make and Do, Our Country, Other Countries, Literature, Fine Arts, Stories, Poetry—the important and essential knowledge of the world, told and pictured so simply and clearly that a child can understand it and made so interesting that the child loves to read it.

The Book of Knowledge was written for children and is designed to aid in their education in the broadest sense. It has proved to be the most popular work for children ever published. As a father or mother you want the best for your child. The Book of Knowledge is the ideal Christmas Gift. Take the opportunity provided by the convenient coupon at the lower right hand corner of this page to inform yourself regarding it. An illustrated 32-page section of it will be mailed to you free and without obligation.

Where does the day begin?

What makes us stop growing?
Where do thoughts come from?
Why is the sea never still?
Why is sugar sweet?
Why is the tiger striped?
Where does a flower get its smell?
Does a bird always sing the same song?

The BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE

wins another great international award

THE wonderful plan of The Book of Knowledge is the idea of a father who loved his child and knew its needs. He drew to his help other parents of like desire and long experience in writing for children. Together they studied the mind of the child in his effort to find out everything he wants to know. From their discoveries The Book of Knowledge grew. Children do not have to be urged to read and consult it. They recognize it as their own book, really made for them.

In Five Languages

Since the first edition was published, The Book of Knowledge has been placed in the homes of more than 2,000,000 children and editions have appeared in five languages—English, French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese.

No one who has not already examined the articles and illustrations in the new revised edition can have any idea of the fascination of this book for children. Why does it capture the child's mind? Why have so many thousands of fathers and mothers in your own city given it to their boys and girls? Why is it so highly recommended? To answer these questions you must see the articles and pictures in The Book of Knowledge for yourself. You may easily do so. Merely mail the coupon below and a 32-page illustrated section reprinted from The Book of Knowledge will be mailed to you free for your information.

MEDAL of HONOR

Awarded to The Grolier Society for the contribution of The Book of Knowledge to children's education

Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, Philadelphia, 1926

Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915; Children's Exposition, Los Angeles, 1922; Calcutta Exposition, 1924; Quebec Exposition, 1926; Minas Geraes, Brazil Exposition, 1926; Sesqui-Centennial Exposition, 1926

We have been notified by the Secretary of the International Jury of Awards of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition at Philadelphia that the Medal of Honor has been awarded to The Grolier Society for the contribution of The Book of Knowledge to children's education.

It is the sixth great exposition award within eleven years, a consistent series of awards to which only The Book of Knowledge may point.

These repeated awards testify impartially to the continued and increasing superiority of The Book of Knowledge, and to the progressiveness and accord with modern educational ideals of its editorial policy.

Originator and pioneer, rendering to children a unique service, The Book of Knowledge, by revisions, expansions and new editions, has advanced with the years and is today, as always, the best in its chosen field and the one great work for the children.

"THE Book of Knowledge is the best known of the children's encyclopedias" say Terman and Lima in their authoritative book, "Children's Reading," based on exhaustive research. "The astonishing popularity of these books proves that children are willing and eager to read material other than fiction providing it is interesting in style and is profusely illustrated. These two requirements The Book of Knowledge fulfills." Another interesting fact brought out by this survey was that "with the exception of The Book of Knowledge all of the most liked books are fiction."

A Unique Work

The Book of Knowledge is different from all other books. It is unique in plan, arrangement and style. It was made for children and is designed to aid in their education in the broadest sense. It is a work which children read with pleasure, going from one subject to another, increasing their knowledge, developing their intelligence, and learning almost unconsciously. Again and again the child's curiosity pushes open the door to new fields of knowledge, and he is guided, step by step, from the simplest ideas and facts to the most profound truths.

You notice below a picture in reduced size of a beautifully illustrated section of The Book of Knowledge. We will gladly mail it free to any parent, teacher or librarian desiring to see what the new revised edition is like, and why it has such a hold on the affections of the children. Mail the coupon.

New Revised Edition [Just Published]

15,000 Striking Educational Pictures

in Color, in Gravure and in Black and White

New Throughout ~ New Departments ~ New Articles ~ New Contributors

The Book of Knowledge is unique not only in its popularity with the children but in the variety of things it does for them. It is a reading book that never fails in interest and of which children never tire. It is a play book, with games and busy activities for leisure hours. It is a book of unforgettable pictures in color, in the exquisite gravure process, and in black and white. It is a book for the development of ideals and the cultivation of good taste in literature and the fine arts. It is a wonderfully efficient reference book with its great alphabetical index of 31,000 references, its subject index and its graded school-work index. In measure of all-around service to the children it stands alone.

The illustrations in The Book of Knowledge are a vast educational picture gallery. Birds, Flowers, Fish, Insects, Shells, Jewels, etc., are pictured in the beautiful colors of nature, in plates requiring from three to eight separate printings for each picture. Special mention must also be made of the gravure pictures, a collection included only in The Book of Knowledge, there reproduced in book form for the first time, and illustrating the finest examples of architecture, sculpture, painting and natural scenery. There are in addition charts, maps, diagrams, and photographs, all included to impress the important facts of knowledge doubly upon the child's mind by giving to the eye in striking pictures what is at the same time told in clear and simple language. There are 2,200 pictures in Color and 1,200 in Gravure.

THE DOLLAR NOW ENCIRCLES THE GLOBE

American Corporations Are Swiftly Extending Their Interests in Foreign Industries and Resources—Far-Flung Operations Have Reached Ten Billions and May Total Twenty-Five Billions by 1935

By STUART CHASE.

THAT the great Stinnes interests of Germany should recently have come to the United States for the funds to finance a reorganization of their far-flung operations and that American capital will hereafter have a first lien on the property is merely an unusually dramatic example of what has been going on for the past few years. The United States not only sends its manufactured goods into the four corners of the earth but American financial interests are now active factors in the domestic business life of all the leading nations.

To say that America is buying out Europe, Canada and South America is, of course, too strong a statement, although it is constantly made by those who speak both in praise and blame. But the expansion of American corporations into other lands and the purchase by Americans of an interest in foreign concerns are major economic developments of the post-war era, the significance of which has yet to be fully understood.

Staggering sums have been invested in the industries of other countries, not only in Europe but throughout the world, and almost every large American concern also operates plants abroad. American telephone interests are reaching out for Government systems in Spain, France, Belgium and Italy; American construction companies are lending foreign Governments money wherewith to pay for constructing public works; American manufacturers are establishing branch plants in Europe, Japan, the Argentine, Australia and South Africa; the Standard Oil Company gives away lamps in China to promote the sale of kerosene; the General Motors Company is sending twice as many cars abroad in 1926 as it did in 1924; American tobacco interests control Turkish and Greek crops and have acquired some British cigarette firms; vast holding companies are acquiring an ever-extending control of foreign enterprises. Month by month the map of the world shows additional locations where American enterprise, American engineers, American capital are digging in, consolidating, strengthening their position.

Up to July 1, 1925, the total investment by American capital abroad was estimated at $9,522,000,000 by the United States Department of Commerce. Of this $4,147,000,000 was in the form of loans guaranteed by foreign Governments, and the balance, $5,375,000,000, in the form of industrial securities and direct investments. The distribution was as follows:

Latin America	$4,140,000,000
Canada	2,545,000,000
Europe	2,115,000,000
Asia and Oceania	722,000,000
Total	$9,522,000,000

Flow of Dollars Grows.

During 1924 the increase in private capital abroad was little short of $1,000,000,000; in 1925 it was estimated at $2,500,000,000. All signs point to a steady increment in 1926. Many economists predict a total of $25,000,000,000 of private capital abroad by 1935; $25,000,000,000 it will certainly be if the present rate of expansion is maintained.

The heaviest investments are in the Americas, Canada and the lands south of the Rio Grande. All of Europe has absorbed less than Canada; Asia's portion is a third that of Europe. Africa is still a garden comparatively unwatered with dollars, but there are a few American investments in South Africa, the best known being the majority of the shares of the Diamond Syndicate, and in Liberia Mr. Firestone's $100,000,000 project to turn large sections of Liberia into rubber plantations has begun its harbor constructions.

In 1900 a bare $500,000,000 of American capital was invested abroad. By 1910 the total had grown to only $2,000,000,000. The vast shift which has turned us from a debtor into a creditor nation was the result of the World War, and has come about almost entirely in the last ten years. In 1910 our investment in Canada was only $300,000,000, while England's was $1,825,000,000—six times as much. In 1923 our investments in Canada had leaped to $2,400,000,000, passing England's, which remained at $2,000,000,000. In Argentina the Chicago beef companies control the cattle output. It may be that today our world total of foreign investments of private capital are actually greater than England's, and if not greater the margin is being closed with incredible rapidity.

Consider the Standard Oil Company of New York as an example of how American corporations are functioning abroad. In 1914 it entered into a sixty-year agreement with the Republic of China to explore for oil and exploit such fields as might be found. For this a corporation was formed, of which 55 per cent. of the capital stock should be owned by the American Company and 37 per cent. by the Chinese Government, leaving 8 per cent. in the treasury. When the Standard Oil Company entered China it gave away kerosene lamps—on the safety-razor principle. Now it sells lamps at cost, 2,000,000 of them annually. And these free or low-priced lamps have helped to increase the sale of kerosene in China from 13,500,000 gallons in 1908 to 200,000,000 gallons today. At Tientsin the company—with an eye to competitive commodities—has built a candle factory with an output of 600,000 cases a year.

The Standard Oil Company of New York is the "dominating oil marketing agent throughout the Orient," and it is the principal agent in Greece, Turkey and the Balkans. It has a large storage and distribution plant at Athens. Its sales in India are growing steadily. It is one of the five American companies in the Iraq concession, covering the oil of the Mosul fields. It has a great plant at Yokohama. And last July it bought 15,000 tons of kerosene from the Soviet Government.

Meanwhile the Standard Oil Company of California controls 900,000 acres of oil lands in Colombia, the Argentine, Ecuador, Venezuela and Mexico. It is organizing a distribution service throughout Mexico. The Standard Oil Company of Indiana, through subsidiary corporations—one of them lately bought from Edward L. Doheny—is interested in oil lands in Colombia, Mexico, New Guinea and Venezuela. The Vacuum Oil Company, influential in Egypt and the Levant, has entered into a contract with the Russian Government to purchase a minimum of 130,000 tons of kerosene in the next two years. And the Vacuum is negotiating for shares in the coal mines of Lower Austria. All of which gives a scant, but authentic, picture of American oil dollars as they swing from Mexico to China.

Consider also telephones and radios. Here is the International Telephone and Telegraph Company, closely affiliated with the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. It is one of those latest developments of superfinance—a holding and a managing company. It not only holds the shares of the subsidiary corporations, but it sends out managers, engineers, accountants, experts of all kinds to operate or help to operate them. This company has, through a subsidiary, taken over the whole telephone service of Spain from the Spanish Government, where it is introducing the dial system. After twenty years the Government may take it back by paying a premium of 15 per cent. The company owns the Thompson-Houston telephone equipment plants of France, employing 2,200 operatives. This plant supplies much of the equipment for the French telephone system.

The International also operates the foreign business of the Western Electric Company through another subsidiary, with manufacturing plants in England, Belgium, France, Spain, Italy, Japan, China, Australia and South America, employing 17,000 workers and selling $30,000,000 worth of products a year. It controls the telephone systems of Cuba and Porto Rica and owns the Mexican Telephone and Telegraph Company. Rumors persist that it is negotiating for the Government telephone systems of various other European countries—particularly France, Belgium and Italy. It recently sold $20,000,000 of equipment to the Italian Government.

The Radio in China.

Meanwhile the Radio Corporation of America operates the American end of radio services in England, Norway, France, Germany, Sweden, Italy, Poland, Holland, Japan, the Argentine and the Dutch East Indies. Through a subsidiary, the Federal Telegraph Company, it is developing the radio possibilities of China.

Here is the Foundation Company, which has sent sand hogs down to blast and burrow for the underpinning of many of the skyscrapers of downtown New York. But from Manhattan it looks east and south over the Atlantic. With branches in London, Paris, Mexico City, Lima, in Brazil, Columbia, and Montreal, it sends sand hogs and engineers to construct harbors, power dams, railroads, sanitation systems, public works, around half the world. It operates in fourteen foreign countries.

It is banker as well as engineer. It lends the Peruvian Government $15,000,000, taking bonds in exchange, and then builds public works in Peru, being paid therefor by its own money. It does the same thing for the Government of Greece, amounting to $2,500,000 for drainage work in Macedonia. To Cordoba, in Spain, it lent 2,500,000 pesos for construction work. Recently the Foundation Company has been bidding on the 500-mile Central highway development for Cuba, a system of roads to cost $50,000,000.

The General Motors Company has export and assembly plants in the Argentine, Brazil, Belgium, France, Germany, Denmark, England, Ireland, New Zealand, Spain, South Africa, Canada. Its overseas selling organization covers the world. Shipments of cars abroad have actually doubled in the past two years—64,000 went over in the first six months of 1926. It is considering the purchase of 800,000 acres of rubber land in Cuba.

The International Harvester Company has manufacturing plants in Canada, France, Germany and Sweden, making binders, reapers, mowers, rakes, tedders and twine. It has selling agencies and distributing posts the world around; sisal plantations in Cuba and Manila; fiber plants in the Philippines; timber and pulpwood holdings in Canada. And the same sort of far flung and expanding organization is maintained by the Eastman Kodak Company, the American Radiator Company, the United Shoe Machinery Company, the Ford Company and many other American manufacturing enterprises. United Fruit owns extensive sugar and fruit plantations in Costa Rica and Jamaica, besides hotels, railways and docks.

Investments Far Afield.

Let us turn to organizations concerned more with investment than with primary manufacturing. The American International Corporation for example, was chartered in 1915 under the laws of New York, with a capital stock of $50,000,000. Its charter gives it very broad powers to deal in almost anything at home or abroad. The principal business and objects of the corporation are "the development of export and import trade, the use of American materials and manufactures abroad, the employment of American capital and American engineers in the construction of foreign enterprises, the enlargement of the system of ocean transportation under the American flag; and the encouragement of American business men in undertaking projects abroad and extending other domestic opportunities to foreign countries."

It has sent many expeditions and commissions to South America, Europe, Asia and other parts of the world to report on definite proposals as well as upon the possibilities of assisting development of these regions with more American dollars. It holds stock in many subsidiary companies—banks, finance companies, steamship lines, the China corporation, engineering concerns, manufacturing companies, export agencies. One of its subsidiaries, Ulen & Co., recently lent $10,000,000 to ten Polish cities and $3,000,000 to Lisbon, Portugal, for municipal works. Another of its subsidiaries carries on a coffee trade, another sells boots and shoes around the seven seas.

There is almost no end to the examples which might be cited of American dollars going to function in other lands. In transportation, manufacturing, mining, engineering, public works, branch banking, marketing, in nearly every conceivable type of economic activity they are engaged outside the boundaries of their homeland. The few instances mentioned have paid very well to date—in manufacturing, trading and finance. A casual survey by geographical areas may help to round out the picture. Take, say, a large country such as Germany, and a small country such as Bolivia. The inventory of major investments in them was largely compiled in 1925, and the golden stream has been rising steadily since that time.

Private loans to the German dye, sugar, coal, potash and shipping industry and to German banks totaled about $50,000,000 on Oct. 15, 1924. Soon afterward came the Dawes plan loan of $110,000,000, which was oversubscribed by American investors; also came new loans to the Ruhr Coal Syndicate, the Rhone-Main-Danube, the Rhenish-Westphalian Syndicate totaling some $10,000,000, and $25,000,000 to the German Gold Rediscount Bank. The Equitable Trust Company, the Chase National Bank, Dillón, Read & Co., and the International Acceptance Bank, a subsidiary of the American International Corporation, have taken the lead in German industrial financing. And there is the new Stinnes loan of $25,000,000.

America in Germany.

For direct investments, the Berlin Karlsruher Industry Company, formerly the German Arms Company, with a capital of 20,000,000 gold marks, is reported to be under American control; the Botany Mills of New Jersey has acquired a $4,000,000 interest in German textile plants; the Hamburg-American Line is now controlled by the United States Line under a twenty-year agreement. The International Agricultural Corporation owns 50 per cent. of the large Sollstedt potash property, including mines and chemical plants. Dillon, Read & Co. have a holding in eleven coal mines, formerly controlled by Stinnes.

The largest German chain-store system has been financed by American capital. Among the American companies operating plants in Germany are the Ford Company, Singer Sewing Machine, Quaker Oats, Standard Varnish, Torrington Company, International Harvester, American Radiator (three plants), B. F. Goodrich Rubber plant with 12,000 men, Chicago Pneumatic Tool, Standard Oil, International Mercantile Marine, Radio Corporation, Otis Elevator, Eastman Kodak and various film companies.

In one fortnight a New York banking house received 100 letters from German firms asking for a total of $500,000,000 in loans. Meanwhile such great firms as Krupps, August Thyssen, Siemens & Halske and Electric Power Company have been floating loans running into the tens of millions on the American market. Dozens of loans have been made to German municipalities, like the famous loan to the City of Cologne.

In 1912 the total American investment in Bolivia was $10,000,000; today it is over $80,000,000. American citizens and corporations have lent $30,000,000 to the Bolivian Government. Another $50,000,000 is invested in tin and oil. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has a concession covering 7,400,000 acres of oil lands for a period of fifty-five years. The concession includes the right to operate railways, trams, harbors, telephone and telegraph lines and other public utilities. The Sinclair Company is also competing for petroleum lands.

Controls Bolivia's Tin.

One-quarter of the world's output of tin comes from Bolivia. The National Lead Company has invested $30,000,000 in tin mines, including a railroad, and controls 80 per cent. of Bolivian production. The Guggenheims own six tin mines in the Inquisivi Province. W. R. Grace & Co. have 3,500 acres of mining properties. Three other large American companies have mining interests in Bolivia.

Meanwhile American engineers constructed the Bolivian Railway, and securities of the company are held in America. The Equitable Trust Company has handled government loans. Ulen & Co., the subsidiary of the American International Corporation, have recently been engaged in public works construction, including the financing and building of the sewer systems of the cities of La Paz and Cochabamba. The same company is building a $10,000,000 railway for the Government. An American firm acquired in 1922 about 300,000 hectares of land in eastern Bolivia for colonization purposes. American capital is behind the National Match Factory of Bolivia.

What is true of Germany and Bolivia is true to a greater or less extent of every country. Similar report could be made regarding most other political subdivisions of the earth's surface—leaving out some deserts, jungles, ice caps and mountain wildernesses. Wherever men have settled into civilized communities, and wherever the treasures of minerals outcrop in marketable quantities, American dollars have gone, American engineers are at work. American methods, American practices, are penetrating the economic structure. The process accelerates at an unheard-of rate. Where it will end, no man has the hardihood to forecast.

NEW KING OF SHIPS IS A TOILING GIANT

Lord Kylsant Directs Greatest Fleet of Merchant Vessels in the World

BY virtue of his recent purchase of the White Star Line, Lord Kylsant, Chairman of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, becomes the world's largest shipping operator. Although his fame has gone to many ports, his rise to power has been so silent that to many people on this side of the Atlantic he is a discovery. Lord Kylsant has never been in New York, but if he ever does come all the city will know it, for he stands 6 feet 7 inches tall.

Slender, well muscled, broad of shoulder, alert in every move, Lord Kylsant is so impressive a figure that London knows it when he walks her streets. He appeals to that same British sense for recognizing power which years ago caused throngs in the Strand to pause when Daniel Webster passed by and to say of the visiting orator from "the States," "There goes a man!"

Of Lord Kylsant the cable dispatches have said that he is a Samson in frame and a demon for work. Those here who know him say he is more like a smoothly running human dynamo, almost silent, often invisible in the very places which thrill with the activities he sets in motion. This sea ruler, who so seldom goes to sea, spends most of his days in three offices, those of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Lines, the Castle Line and the shipbuilding firm of Harlan & Wolff. He is a business director in forty companies and organizations in all, but three business desks and a desk in the library of his home in Cadogan Square, London, give him facilities for his labors.

Systematic as Lord Kylsant is, he comes and goes at such varying hours that those who work with him—not under him, for he likes to be surrounded by pacemakers—are always ready for him. A keen judge of men, he selects executives upon whom he places responsibility, and he expects them to be incapable of surprise. All who come in touch with him also cultivate that rare gift of putting what they have to say in few words.

Lord Kylsant at Work.

There come to him as soon as he steps to his desk a thin sheaf of papers; in London these are called agenda. An agendum takes on its primal meaning when Lord Kylsant gets it, for it is then something to be acted upon, and action is swift. An agendum, for instance, typed neatly in the middle of one sheet of paper, may mean the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of pounds. The Chairman scans it and writes his initial "K" fair and large. There is a dynamic force even in the flourish which starts things in all quarters of the globe. That "K" is no perfunctory O. K., but an order for action.

Although "K" himself decides at top speed, he makes no snap judgments, nor does he act without an intimate knowledge of detail. His retentive memory is always in commission. The other day there was presented to him a new schedule for one of the South American lines under his control. Many are the factors of time and place which crowd into these ocean time tables, on which the reservations for cabins and the movements of freight are based.

"This is not correct," said Lord Kylsant almost instantly, "for certainly the Asturias will interfere with the So-and-So at Santos."

He was right. By some sixth sense he had detected a slip in the system regulating the arrivals and departures of a large fleet. With 538 vessels of the first class under his control (and he is reported to be reaching out for more), the head of all the lines visualizes their places in every port and on every sea.

Such qualities of mind as these show why the friends of the Baron expressed no surprise when the announcement of his last great deal was made. His rise has been due to his close attention to every detail, to his enthusiasm in his work and to his ability to see far into the future.

One of the surprising features of his career is that he did not come of seamen stock and was not steeped in marine traditions, as many others in his calling have been. Born March, 1863, he came into the world at one of the most critical and significant times in the development of shipping. Owen Cosby Phillips, as he was christened, was the third son of the Rev. Canon Sir James Erasmus Phillips, prebendary of Salisbury Cathedral. His father was the twelfth baronet of the Phillips line—a distinguished family in Wales, which traces its descent to Maximus, who was proclaimed Emperor of Rome by his legions while on British soil. Maximus is reputed to have been a Spaniard of giant stature who entered the service of the Emperor Theodosius in the fourth century and rose to high place. The family is thoroughly Welsh in its traditions and has been a factor in its native Carmarthenshire for centuries.

Lord Kylsant was educated in Newton College in South Devon, where he became interested in engineering and economic subjects, although at that time he did not show any special leaning toward maritime affairs. His first contacts with ocean commerce, in fact, were when he entered the service of a Glasgow shipping company.

Began With One Ship.

His natural gifts as a pioneer soon came to the fore. By 1889 he had started on his marine enterprises by becoming the owner of one steamship. When he entered the shipping business everything was in transition. The change from iron to steel hulls for steamships had just been made, and in 1889 came the shift from single to twin screws. From 1890 on, there were many other improvements, as the ocean steamship progressed to its present gigantic proportions.

In all these activities, the Welshman has had a leading part.

Lord Kylsant, now 63 years old, is as alert for the new as he was at 23. He began by looking ahead, seeking new methods, testing the latest machinery and devices. He has been the foe of easy and routine methods of doing business and of running steamship lines. Wherever he took charge of a fleet of vessels there came new developments which, later on, were to justify his point of view.

Lord Kylsant, or rather Owen Cosby Phillips, as he was then, became Chairman of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company in 1902, and to his policy of constant rejuvenation the growth of that corporation is attributed. The Royal Mail, founded early in the last century, long before the advent of steam, was intended to carry British mail to the West Indies and South America. It had much of the same traditions as had the East India Company, which once had a navy of its own, or of the Peninsular and Oriental, the P. and O., which "held the gorgeous East in fee." With the coming of steam to take the place of sail, the Royal Mail sent the Don and the Magdalena, then steamships accounted to be luxuriously appointed, "rolling down to Rio." When Lord Kylsant was new in the shipping world the old Royal Mail was growing in power and influence and extending its trade in all the Southern Hemisphere.

One of the big developments introduced by the far-seeing "K" was the refrigeration method for transporting food from the New World to the Old. A tremendous trade in frozen beef was built up between the Argentine and England. The same principle was applied to the transportation of California citrus fruits and Oregon apples to English ports. The Royal Mail as a pathfinder had been instrumental in putting a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, and with the digging of the canal it was in a still better position to carry on a trade with the Golden Coast.

In the development of motor vessels Lord Kylsant has also been very zealous. His agenda teem with things to do about getting Diesel engines and electrically propelled hulls. Several large passenger craft, motor-driven and of tremendous tonnage, as compared with the original side-wheelers, for instance, were ordered by the Royal Mail.

An Expert Himself.

To keep abreast of the times and then a few decades ahead of them is the chief concern of the ever-alert person who subscribes himself "K." He does a vast amount of reading on technical subjects so that he can know exactly what it is that his experts recommend.

In his personal habits and tastes Lord Kylsant is very simple, almost abstemious. He does not care for either elaborate fare or rare vintages. In his amusements, although he is a yachtsman, he tends more toward the life of the open country. Of his native land he owns some five thousand acres, and takes a keen delight in being Lord of the Manor of Llanstephen and Master of Fox Hounds. His principal seat is Amroth Castle, although he has several other residences, including his London house. He is a member of several important clubs in the British metropolis, such as the Marlborough and the Carlton.

OUR TOWN AND ITS FOLK

The Old Cider Bar

By BERTRAM REINITZ.

THE sailors from the Brooklyn Navy Yard who crowded into the venerable apple cider bar on Washington Street, between High and Nassau, during the war have long since scattered to the forty-eight States from which they were recruited. That was eight years ago, but every so often a demobilised seaman, who is now farming or steam-fitting or driving a truck or living on his interest, will drop in and quietly ask the bartender-proprietor if he has seen or heard lately of some particular cider-quaffing comrade of the old days. If the answer is in the negative the inquirer sips a long seidel of the amber nectar, talks over old times and leaves his address, which may be Tacoma, Wash., or Jacksonville, Fla., or almost any of the communities in between. Few of the peace-time tars patronize the bar, as the Navy Street gate of the yard—the nearest to the cider store—is now closed and the entrance in use at present is a half mile away.

The proprietor says that he likes the idea of being a sort of missing persons' bureau. He has witnessed greetings of reunited buddies that threatened to crash all his glassware with their booming detonations. He is of the opinion that war builds better friendships than peace does.

The cider bar, the only one in Brooklyn, will celebrate its thirty-second birthday within a few weeks. The founder was succeeded in control by his son, the present owner, a decade and a half ago. The latter explains that cider selling is something of a family trait, because two generations ago his people ran a pressing mill up around Mount Kisco, which is now a commuters' centre but was then a backwoods region.

The passing of the Volstead act did not help his business, although he had confidently expected that it would. He complains that New Yorkers have apparently gotten out of the habit of drinking at bars, regardless of whether soft or hard stuff is served at them.

"Maybe, though," he muses, "the people of this city will take to drinking cider if we ever have prohibition."

Snake Hill

THE plethora of Heights in New York City—Bushwick, Crown, Harlem, Morris, Stuyvesant, University and Washington—makes coasting easily a major Winter sport of the metropolis. Almost every street of this ruffled topography when encrusted by snow becomes a white and shining course for everything on runners from the squat "belly-woppers" to the elongated toboggans and bobsleds.

The steep side of Lookout Mountain in Prospect Park is a stirring challenge to the coaster's daring, but the outstanding hill of thrills is Highland Boulevard, that curls gracefully but sharply from the Ridgewood Reservoir in Highland Park down to the junction of Jamaica and Force Tube Avenues, in Brooklyn. This dip of the boulevard is known all over the borough as Snake Hill. Between snows motorists climb it to test the pulling power of their machines.

The hill introduces itself gently to the coaster, but subsequently gives him a wild climax. At the top the incline is straight and gradual, making for somewhat slow progress until the first turn is reached. Here it descends swiftly in a sweeping curve that continues, without a straight stretch, down to the base. Failure to negotiate a turn will precipitate a coaster over the side of the road and down an almost sheer declivity for forty feet.

The patrolman stationed at the bottom of the hill reports that most of the youngsters take the curves successfully, but that failure often marks the attempts of adults.

"Quite a few of the fathers who come to watch their sons coast decide to try their hand at it," he said. "They do fine until the curve starts curving too fast for them and then they either roll off the sled or off the hill. The other night one stout and pompous-looking man set out to show his two boys how coasting really ought to be done. He got along well at first, but in the middle of the turn his sled slipped out from under him and he went the rest of the way on his stomach, but just about as fast as before."

Equilibrist

PERHAPS the most conspicuous of the 1,754 New Yorkers who were born in Turkey is Selim, the equilibristic vender of seed candy, who peddles his sweet stock on Seventh Avenue, from West Thirty-fourth Street to West Thirty-eighth, between the crowded hours of noon and 2 P. M. Selim threads his way through the throngs on the sidewalk with as little concern as if his headgear were a pearl gray fedora and not a spacious tray piled high with an American version of a Moslem confection. As he glides majestically along his tray moves gently up and down on even keel like a raft in a lazy ocean swell.

He seems quite alone in all that crowd of pedestrians. The mincing stenographers with their tightly wrapped coats, the salesmen with their sample cases and the shipping clerks with the rolling racks of ready-to-wear garments, generously give him every right of way. He acknowledges all greetings of his steady customers with a smile in which all of his features play an active part. But he does not nod, because such a gesture would mean bankruptcy.

Selim is ideally equipped by nature for his method of retailing Turkish seed candy. He is five feet little or nothing in height, a convenient stature that permits most of his patrons to make their selections without his doffing the tray. While these transactions are being effected he rolls his eyes upward like a man with a stiff neck trying to watch a steeplejack at work. He makes change swiftly and accurately by the feel of the coins.

Slippery pavements do not deter Selim, who wears no rubbers. If he does miss his footing for a moment, he skillfully arches his neck in such a way that there is no list whatever to his tray, although after such an experience he can be observed mopping his brow with an ample red-bordered handkerchief that may or may not have been originally half of a tablecloth.

Selim is an affable, kindly character with malice only toward those whom he is convinced are eagerly hoping to see his tray topple. They will have a long wait, Selim says. The last debacle of this kind occurred twelve years ago—and then it was only because he was jostled by a taxi-cab while crossing a street. He asserts with great finality that if his stock is ever spilled again he is going into the rug business.

Bird Mart

THE providing of feathered pets for the metropolitan district is necessarily a large and active industry. There is no official census of the caged-bird population of the city, but dealers' estimates place it at close to two-thirds of a million. With normal mortality and casualties inflicted by cats, the annual turn-over in the business is very substantial.

Traffic in birds usually achieves its peak during the pre-holiday period. The singing stock in the wholesale market is then at its heaviest in order to make prompt deliveries to the three hundred-odd pet merchants of the five boroughs.

Trading in fragile goods that warbles its own sales talk has a charm and a poetry that are not found in the handling of more prosaic commodities, according to one wholesaler.

"You'd think that twenty-two years in this business would take all the music out of a canary's singing as far as I was concerned," he said. "As a matter of fact, it is quite the reverse. I think that if there were words to the songs of some of the birds, they would be as beautiful as the sounds. Instead of being glad when I make a profitable sale, there are times when I feel pretty badly over it. This happens when I dispose of birds whose warbling keeps ringing in my ears. I'd take home some of these, but I've got eight already and the missus says that she'll throw me and the bird out if I bring in another one."

STRANGER THAN FICTION

Old Fuzzy Wuzzy

By S. T. WILLIAMSON.

WHERE would some of our heroes be if there were no poets? Chronicled in clumsy prose, their exploits may be remembered for a generation or so. But along comes a rhymester who juggles a few words into an electrifying sequence, and students of elocution do the rest. Another character has been thrown dazzlingly out of historical perspective.

It is strange that this time-proved method of creating or perpetuating reputations has not been taken up by people who make a profession of that sort of thing, and who have "publicity engineer" or "public relations counsel" embossed on stationery and in gold leaf on office doors. If after writing the great man's speeches and autobiography they get his picture into the papers and the movies, they seem content, or as content as such restless workers can be.

If Thomas Buchanan Read had not been fond of horses, Phil Sheridan by now would have been just another Civil War General instead of the man who was twenty miles away. Another famous military ride was that of the Light Brigade, and every six months or so another "last survivor" dies. But what did the Heavy Brigade do at Balaklava? Then there was a historic ride made in 1775 that is unforgetable in verse. Paul Revery has a more poetic sound than the name of his companion, Dawes. So, it is the midnight ride of Paul Revere, and nothing about Dawes, which is piped in every schoolroom. The latter's descendant, by the way, made a memorable ride from the New Willard to the Capitol. He arrived too late to cast a deciding ballot, and that, too, is unsung.

Having thus strayed off on a tangent, it is appropriate to make inquiry about a human tangent whose fame has been prolonged by some thumping rhymes—what about Fuzzy Wuzzy, the "big, black, boundin' beggar," who scorned bullet and bayonet and "bruk a British square"?

BECAUSE he was so extraordinarily wily and ferocious, out-of-the-ordinary parentage was ascribed to him. One myth made him a baptised Parisian who turned Moslem after his father died and his mother remarried an Egyptian. This was not a satisfactory, desperate enough origin, so another story had him the child of a Scotch sailor and a Sudanese mother, a sufficiently weird union for the most murderous of offspring. Genealogical investigation, however, eventually identified him as the son of a Turk and a mother from one of the nomadic, fanatical tribes bordering on the Red Sea.

Ostensibly, Fuzzy was a dealer in European goods and ostrich feathers. In reality his was the far more prosperous business of importing and exporting "black ivory." It had been an open and respectable occupation until the Egyptian Government decided it abolished and British gunboats patrolled the Red Sea and a pious English officer named Gordon, then in the Egyptian military service, attempted to stamp out the slave trade in the Sudan. Finally, the Wild Dervishes, a contradictory name for a British gunboat patrol vessel, captured a Jeddah-bound dhow ladened with some of Fuzzy's human merchandise.

Its owner gathered a few fighters under a spreading sycamore tree and harangued them on the probable commercial ruin of the Sudan if such governmental interference in business went on. His friends listened with enthusiasm, whereupon Fuzzy armed them with the richness of Monte Cristo that and took to the hills. Some time later a mullah proclaimed himself the Mahdi, or leader of the faithful, and declared a holy war against the invaders of the Sudan. Fuzzy was appointed his chief lieutenant with the picturesque and avenging title of "Emir of the Dervish of God."

NOMADIC tribes flocked to the Mahdi. Armed merely with two-handed swords, spears and hide shields, they leaped upon Egyptian garrisons and slaughtered whole fellahin soldiers and their British officers. Warships sent ashore landing parties which Fuzzy's followers drove into the sea. From England came some of the proudest regiments of the army. Artillery, rifles and Gatling guns were turned on the Sudanese who seemed to leap out of every hole. These people seemed determined upon committing suicide. They hurled themselves upon British bayonets and with their dying strength used their spears with terrifying effect. Driven off, they evaporated seemingly into the sand, only to appear somewhere else with redoubled fury.

At Tamai Fuzzy's people fell upon a British infantry brigade that was drawn up in the old-fashioned square formation invincible seventy years before at Waterloo. They crawled over the bodies of their own dead, under the muzzles of the guns, and cleared their way through the square. The brigade gave way in confusion, and the day was saved only by a cavalry charge. It was a momentary triumph, but it was one which caught the imagination, and it put Fuzzy Wuzzy into English literature.

Osman Digna, who fought the British in the Sudan for seventeen years, died last week at Wadi Halfa, where he had been in captivity for twenty-six years.

Let me. . . . Now what do you know!
Help! I have frosted my feet!

Chewing-tobacco is going out of favor, the Department of Agriculture finds. Time was when this humble viand moved in the best society, but society has a lot of queer notions nowadays. About the time of Boss Tweed the consumption of eating-tobacco reached its zenith. At that period the man without two brown streaks descending from the corners of his mouth was looked upon as a dude, and the streets ran like madcap brooks. The introduction of central heating plants in place of stoves marked the beginning of the downfall of the innocent pastime. As the world grew more effeminate and calcimined, laws were adopted making it almost impossible for a man to indulge comfortably in the pleasant practice in any large city. The suburban rush and the rise of the country gentleman class immediately followed, but even to Greenwich and Morristown the prejudice reached. Of late the use of the weed as an edible has been generally restricted to the great open spaces and the colleges, and now even there it is declining. Thus a golden era closes. Today many a wide circle of acquaintances cannot boast of containing a single tobacco-chewer. Today not one small boy in a thousand knows the joy of making an art collection of tin tobacco tags on the barn door. There are not even barns any more, alas!

Pity the Colleges.

I plead for pensive tears for poor old Yale
From all your eyes.
For Princeton let there be a very gale
Of pitying sighs.
For Amherst, Williams, Rutgers, N. Y. U.,
Cornell, Penn State, Columbia, Purdue, Brown, Harvard, Lafayette and Lehigh, too, Lament likewise.

In fact, there is no manly stamping-ground
Of education
That does not richly merit our profound
Commiseration.
For none of them the prospect offers cheer.
They all approach a day of losses drear;
They all, it seems, will suffer so next year
From graduation.

Amundsen and Nobile.

As friends they steered an airy prow
Across the icy polar deeps.
Alas! between those comrades now
A coldness creeps.

Brooklyn is found to be cheaper for living than any other borough, but something will doubtless be done about it.

Not long ago there was great agitation about the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. Now one learns from The Architects' Journal that the structure itself is moving—"a grave admission in view of the phenomenal weight of material piled up by Sir Christopher Wren to great heights upon slender supports; all the more grave since those supporting piers are but feebly constructed, and still more sinister when it is remembered that the lateral supports of the piers are themselves out of the perpendicular, the surrounding arches all distorted and the exterior walls bent to such an extent that the passers-by may recognize at a glance the deflection in the ground-story window-sills at the south transept. Even if the natural decay of the building is alone to be blamed, continuous evidences of movement are highly disquieting, for, unless they are arrested, they can only lead to one result—disaster."

Tom Charman, an artist living in the New Forest, England, recently told the British College of Psychic Science some very surprising things. He placed before his audience some sheets on which, he said, fairies had carved their own likenesses. According to this authority, fairy folk are more visible at night than by day. "Their height varies from a few inches to two and a half feet," he said. "I think they are spirit fairies who can, under proper conditions, materialize themselves. There are four kinds of fairies—earth, fire, water and air. I once saw a great white city toward which there was what seemed to be a procession which included Chinese, Japanese and other types of fairies."

SHAW EXPOUNDS SOCIALISM AS WORLD PANACEA

Playwright Answers H. G. Wells and Advocates, in Recent Fabian Lecture, A Concerted Attack on Capitalism as First Step to International Culture

In a recent address before the Fabian Society of London George Bernard Shaw spoke on "Cultural Internationalism." The article that follows comprises extracts from that address. The lecture was one of a series which carried the general title: "The Shrinking World; Dangers and Possibilities." At the meeting the chairman announced that this might be Mr. Shaw's last appearance on the lecture platform.

From a Lecture

By GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

I HAVE one advantage tonight, I am addressing the last meeting of the series. The last shilling we can hope to take has been taken, and therefore, unlike the other lecturers, I am in a position to give away the show. The series of lectures has had for its general title "The Shrinking World." Now I do not know how you interpreted that. If you interpreted it as meaning that the world was shrinking from the lectures, you may have been right; but I believe that the meaning of whoever invented that title was that the world is getting small. We all say that the means of communication have become so rapid, the distances between places have become so small in terms of time, that the world is getting smaller and smaller. That is the shrinking world. I put it to you, as sensible people, did you ever hear such nonsense in the whole course of your life?

The world is not shrinking, meaning the inhabited world, which is what we are dealing with; that is getting larger and larger. The cities are getting larger, and there are a great many more of them. The battles are getting larger. The cities nowadays are no longer cities, they are provinces. If you go to the Birmingham district or the Manchester district you will find that there are still a number of names of towns left scattered about, but they have all grown into one town. In military matters you will find that the battles have become campaigns, and that they never settle anything. All you can say is that they are enormously larger than the old battles and that the casualty lists are much larger.

If it is true that the inhabitants of the world can get at one another more easily, that simply facilitates their cutting one another's throats. It may make certain operations more manageable, but that does not mean that the scene of the operations or the object of the operations is getting smaller; on the contrary, it is getting larger and larger and more difficult. What we have got to understand is that we are not facing a shrinking world, we are facing a colossally expanding world, with its difficulties enormously increased by the fact that all the diverse peoples in the world have been put within reach of one another in a way that they never had been before.

How Are We Facing It?

Now, how are we facing that problem, that enormously increased world? We are facing it with the moral and legislative equipment of a medieval village, tempered by the regulations of a tribe of wandering Jews, made at a time when Moses, although he was within a few miles of his objective, had to keep them wandering in the desert round and round about for forty years, until all the people who had come from Egyptian slavery had died out. Even then the results of putting them into the Promised Land at last, after all that toil, were not too encouraging from the point of view of the historian.

My special heading tonight is International Culture. What is a culture? A culture, I take it, is a body of thought common to a large number of people. As a result of that, it is a body of moral institutions, common beliefs; and the ideal culture would of course be a body of thought founded on a body of knowledge, real, scientific, genuine knowledge and resulting in certain common standards of conduct. It is true that a culture could be founded on a body of thought, a body of knowledge, but unfortunately it can also be founded on a common body of superstition, folly, romance, ignorance and error. I am afraid that that is the description that applies in a greater or less degree to almost all the cultures that we have in the world today.

However, no matter; we say culture is founded on genuine knowledge. I said, by the way, a moment ago, scientific knowledge, but as the scientific knowledge of today is about the most romantic thing that human credulity has ever imposed on the human race, I prefer genuine knowledge, and knowledge which has some remote kind of correspondence to the facts of life. In any community, whatever its culture may be, you have to have government, order, and organization. As a result of that, you have to have a dogma, a good deal of dogma, and you have finally to have a dogma of infallibility.

The Roman Catholic Church has, as you know, got a dogma of infallibility about which we who do not belong to that church are occasionally very superior; but I really do not see that our own dogma of infallibility is any more plausible. The Roman Catholic says the Pope is infallible; we say the King can do no wrong. If you come to the common sense of the matter as it appeals to the ordinary man, there is nothing whatever to choose between the two statements, except that the Papacy is a little more venerable institution, and is better stage-managed, if I may put it that way, than the constitutional monarchy is. I am not sure that the dogma of infallibility, if you understand it as it should be understood, is not a little more imposing as applied to the Pope than it is as applied to the King. • • •

Now let us get a little closer to the question of culture as I have defined it. Let us take some historical examples of culture. There are two great religious cultures very familiar to us—the culture of Christendom, and the culture of Islam—Mohammedanism, as we call it. These cultures you may contrast with two other cultures—Feudalism and Capitalism. We are looking forward to what our friend Trotsky advocates so strongly, feeling as he does so strongly the need of it, and that is a new culture which he calls a proletarian culture. • • •

When you come to feudalism you have had large bodies of people, at one time a very large body, practicing feudalism and really believing and acting on all the assumptions of feudalism. It is astonishing how many of those people still exist among us. You will find them even in Parliament, and even in the Government, and that peculiar stratification of society which is called feudalism is the one on which they habitually act and in the terms of which they habitually think.

The "Economic Man."

When you come to capitalism you are still harder down on the facts. Capitalism got away from the theologic man and invented the economic man; and you know he is really a fact. The economic man, crudely conceived, is a man who will pursue his own advantage, who will make as much money as he can. Evidently that is not true of all. You will find men, for instance, who have had to choose between making a great deal of money, say, by stockbroking, promoting, underwriting, shall I say; and making hardly any money at all as poets. Nevertheless, they refuse to become stockbrokers on any terms, and they insist on being poets at all hazards.

Nevertheless, they do not cease to be economic men, because, once they have made a decision, once a man has become a stockbroker or a poet, he will make as much money by his stockbroking as he can or as much money by his poetry as he can. There are occasionally startling exceptions. At the last meeting of the Fabian Society I had to sit in a state of great confusion, not knowing exactly what to do, whilst the whole audience congratulated me on having received a large sum of money, which, as it happened, I had just handed back and had not got at all. I was not precisely acting as the economic man on that occasion, but you may regard that as being a very transient aberration.

I make as much money as I possibly can habitually out of my plays and novels. I insist on doing that rather than pursuing what may be called an honest trade; but there it is. You have this fact, as I say, that these economic cultures do come down very much more on the actual facts of human nature.

The consequence is that curious hopes are arising of an economic culture. All the time that we have been in this room studying these questions in a very large way, a sort of running accompaniment of our meetings has been kept up by Mr. H. G. Wells in the shape of a number of volumes about a gentleman named Clissold. Clissold is a man who believes that, after all, the capitalists—or, rather, the men of Big Business, the financiers, the big employers, the organizers—these are the men who are going practically to thrust Parliament and the churches and all that sort of rubbish to one side; and they are going to take the world in hand and organize it. • • •

I think there is no doubt that this Clissoldism, as it were, is getting into the air. Already you find in fiction people like the gentleman in one of my plays called Undershaft. You find this idea of the great millionaire, the great organizer. Mr. Wells thinks it is possible to educate them. I was particularly careful to show in my play that Mr. Undershaft would have nothing to do with any partner who was educated; he insisted on getting somebody who had escaped that process.

Grades of International Culture.

Since that is really the international culture which is in the air at present, and which is exciting some people, I want just to go a little this evening into its difficulties. My business tonight will be very largely to raise difficulties. That is all the use I am really in this world. Culture, in the sense in which I have been using the word—bodies of thought founded on bodies of knowledge or on bodies of superstition or on bodies of romance, or bodies of anything you like that possesses men's minds—there are several of them in the world; but when you get a perfectly genuine definition of culture, such as I have given you, you begin to perceive that the boundaries between these cultures are not vertical boundaries like war.

Cultures exist in strata. You have a top stratum and then you have one underneath that. If you take the ocean, for example, you have a stratum of water at a certain depth, a certain pressure of water; then you have another stratum under that, and another under that, and another under that. The fish that can live in one stratum cannot live in another. If you get hold of a fish in the lower strata and bring it up to the top, it bursts promptly; and that is exactly the case with a culture. If you take a man from a low culture and bring him up to the top culture, he bursts, more or less, figuratively; mentally and intellectually he does burst, or bodily occasionally.

You will see that I am now getting to the question of internationalism, because these strata are international. Let us borrow from the military gentlemen their classification—C-1, C-2, C-3. You have head a lot of these, and it is a very good way. You can take C as meaning culture; C-1 is the top startum, C-2 is the one underneath it, C-3 is the one underneath that. These are all international in the sense that, no matter where you go in the world, you will find C-1 people, C-2 people and C-3 people. That is the way you must think of the matter. You must not think that there is an English culture, and a French culture, and a Chinese culture, and begin to consider how you can bring them all together. As a matter of fact, you will find in China the C-1 man and you will find in France the C-1 man; and you will find that these cultures really correspond to grades of human ability. • • •

The C-1 people are all right. Les beaux esprits se rencontrent, which means, the choice spirits find one another out. Therefore, if the C-1 people were left in control of the world, the world might get on pretty well. But before I go into that question I just want to point out to you, that when you envisage these strata, C-1, C-2, C-3, and so on, you must not think of that as being always a fixed thing. You must not think of men as being always the same, a man having a certain character and keeping it under all conditions. • •

We are all C-1 people—at least we had better pretend we think one another so—but we have not a very powerful and commanding share in the affairs of the country. When you have a Signor Mussolini firing canons at little children in Corfu, because he said the Italians wanted a striking gesture; when you think of the sort of things that happened in my own country, that really you did not manage to make Ireland what they call the Free State until you had done a frightful lot of murdering and burning.

"Nothing to Dublin."

I remember, when I went out to Flanders during the War, and they showed me Ypres, and I looked at it, and they said: "What do you think of it?" I said: "It is nothing to Dublin. You should see Dublin, the city where I was born. The walls of Ypres are standing." I remember telling Commander Haig at that time: "What you want is an explosive that will act laterally. Your explosives leave the walls standing." But they did not leave the walls standing in Dublin. They took the whole centre of Dublin, and practically there was hardly a wall left standing; and that was only a part of a campaign of fire and murder of the most horrible description, quite equaling the sort of things that Alva used to do in the Netherlands.

Remember, the man who was mainly responsible for what was done in Ireland was a minister, Sir Hamar Greenwood. Do you look on him with anything of the sort of horror that, if you are a good Protestant, you are supposed to look back at Alva with? ("Yes"). A gentleman says yes; I assure that gentleman that Sir Hamar Greenwood got 18,000 votes up in Sunderland without the slightest difficulty. There was no reaction against him politically whatever, as far as I could make out, but his electoral chances were rather improved.

I need not remind you of the atrocity of Denshawi—one of those hideous blots on the face of history but which never shook the credit of Lord Grey in the slightest degree. Nobody ever bothered particularly about it, and the people who did not bother about it I dare say really thought they were C-1 people; but they were not. On the whole, when you look at that kind of thing, and then when you look at what—this was all done under the war strain—when you come to consider what is done under the religious strain, things do not get in the least better. • • •

All these cultures, which are represented by these religious movements, are really very fiercely nationalist and imperialist cultures—hatred of the foreigner, rivalry with the foreigner; hatred of the man who disagrees with you in religion; hatred of the man who has got £20 a year perhaps more than you, which is a very strong feeling—the refusal to allow your children to play with him, to allow your daughter to marry his son and so on. All these class feelings are very strong. It is only the C-1 man who gets out of them.

The question comes, What is the remedy, if you want to make a move, since the C-3 people and the C-2 people are an obstacle to real international union and culture of any kind? There is the eugenic remedy, the first one which suggests itself to some people. They say, breed out the C-2 and all the lower strains, and breed in C-1. Let us have a population, not of C-3 or C-2 people, but consisting exclusively of C-1 people. Unfortunately, we have not got the remotest idea of how to set about it or how to get it—not the slightest.

You go to your eugenics societies and all that. I once went to address the Eugenic Society, and I unfortunately began my address by saying that the object of the Eugenic Society was to breed a better class of human beings, and I nearly wrecked the society. They went into hysterics; they said that such an infamous idea had never entered their head. Why they joined the society I do not know; perhaps on the off chance of hearing a speech from Dean Inge. I grant you that that is a very good reason; still, it was not a eugenic reason. It still remains that the only step that we dare take. We know nothing about the subject. If you want to get better people the only thing to do is to extend the field of sexual selection, and the only way you can do that is by giving everybody the same income; and we are not very close to that as yet.

When you give up eugenics you say, What is to be done? Admitting that the C-1 man is a happy accident, not like myself, and that the C-1 men and women will be in a small minority, then comes your remedy. Why not entrust the government of the world and the management of diplomacy and international affairs—why not hand that over to the C-1 people? Some such idea as that always has been a little in the minds of men. There has been always a sort of habit, when you have got a government, or a priesthood, or a communion of saints, or any other sort of people, to look up to and obey them. People always do their best to persuade themselves that these persons are C-1, but we who look a little more closely at politics and know how things are done, know that they are not C-1, that that thing has not come about, that somehow or another the C-1's are on the whole much more likely to get crucified than to get into the Cabinet.

You find that Demos—that is a convenient term to describe C-2, 3, 4, 5, and so on—Demos does not like C-1's. C-2 never does. He fears them in some way. It is a curious thing, but remember that we are speaking of grades of ability, and higher grades of ability have something rather terrifying about them; and when you fear a thing you hate it. Almost all hatred in the world comes from fear. C-1 people have to spend half their time in intimidating people without in the slightest degree meaning to do so, and during the other half they are trying to get out of the mess that they have got into by intimidating them, not knowing exactly what is wrong. But, at any rate, it is out of the question at present to entrust international relations to C-1's, for the simple reason that the C-2 and C-3 people will not allow it. • • •

So that really you are driven out of this idea. Democracy won't let you carry it out. What would be a third thing? I think the third leads us back on our tracks. Why not go back to laissez faire and trust to Clissold? Well, there is a movement, as I said, in that direction. There is this idea that Mr. Wells is not really advocating but is only putting it as the point of view of a man who is handling affairs on the big scale.

One of the things that shows you how it has been in the air is that quite a large society has grown up in our midst of late years, a body called Rotarians. Their object is to raise the employer, the business man, who is a mere vulgar tradesman, to raise him to professional rank, to make him an idealist, seeing that so much of the government of the world has passed into his hands, to try and make him worthy of his destiny; in fact, the ideal that is put forward in Clissold. It is, at any rate, worth teaching to the employers, trying to raise them to this particular height.

I myself on two occasions addressed the Rotarians. You know the way they meet. They have a midday lunch all together in the various cities. There is supposed to be one representative of each business, and that is how the club is made up. As a matter of fact, I found in them a great many representatives of a particular business. In the printing business, for instance, you had the machine represented, and the printing represented, and the paper represented, and I do not know what else; at any rate, it is perfectly easy to get as many men who are virtually printers into clubs as you like.

In Liverpool and Edinburgh.

That does not matter; the more the merrier. I, in my eloquent manner, the manner in which I am at present addressing you, and in my lucid manner, I put the ideal before them; and I never saw men more astonished in the whole course of my life. I tried first in Liverpool, and then I tried in Edinburgh. It is quite true that these men came together, and that they lunched, and told one another funny stories, but I really could not see that any of them had any idea in their heads that the Rotarians had any other object or purpose; and I am afraid that the ideal with which the thing was formed never really has succeeded well in getting into the heads of the business men. • • •

Sometimes, of course, you have a great employer of labor, an organizer of labor, who is an idealist—Mr. Ford, for instance. Mr. Ford's books are full of wisdom and his practice is very interesting. He has cut out the eight-hour day by introducing the five-day week, which is distinctly a new stunt, taking it, not as a fact perhaps, but purely as a stunt.

But, somehow or other, when you are thinking always of the international culture, a culture that will bind the people together, I seem to remember the attempt that Mr. Ford made to interfere in the war, and it did credit to his heart, if we may say so, but it was not very promising with regard to his head. Somehow or other you felt that government by gentlemen like Mr. Ford would do a great deal of good in various directions, but internationally, as a means of preventing wars and preserving the peace of the world, there he did not distinguish himself in the way that he distinguished himself when introducing the Ford car and high wages in his factories. • • •

The World Running Away.

Capital at the present time is running away with the whole world, and these gentlemen are very much in the position of a chauffeur whose car has run away and he does not know how to stop it and does not know how to steer it and, accordingly, all he can do is to try to look wise and hold on to the wheel and hope he won't get into the ditch or over the precipice; and, as we are all in the car, it is not at all reassuring and we begin to suspect from time to time that he does not in the least know what he is doing.

The fact that these wonderful extensions, these wonderful creations of what my friend Sidney Webb calls new social tissue in their hands—the fact that this is taking place does not in the least prove that they are managing the whole thing. They are gripping on today and they are making money, but they are not making an international culture of it and I do not believe they will. You see, they represent a particular kind of ability. There are people of special ability in the world. Some of them are very nice; you don't bother about them at all. They may be able to make very large fortunes, and quite possibly, even if we introduce socialism, they might make a great lot of money, and it would be extremely unpopular to interfere with them. • • •

But the talent that is represented by the Clissold people is a quite different sort of thing. It is not an individual talent, exercised by the possessor of the talent; it is the art of exploiting other people's talent. It is the art of taking advantage of the business ignorance or incapacity of the individual man of talent, getting hold of him and practically enslaving him, giving him enough to live on and taking all the rest for yourself.

There are two sorts there; there is the organizing talent, and there is the disciplining talent. There are some people who, either from force of character or from a complete indifference to making themselves very disagreeable, are able to intimidate other people, able to keep discipline and get orders obeyed. They do not get quite such high prices because they are a little commoner than the organizers. But these organizing people, simply because they have a monopoly of this particular kind of talent that you call business talent—which does not really imply great moral qualities or great political qualities—a man has it in such a degree that he can pile millions on millions—you may infer that that man has an intellect and conscience like that of Mr. Wells.

That is a tremendous mistake. Mr. Clissold, in the book, was a little like Mr. Wells occasionally; I think you will admit that; but, some way or other, the actual Clissold with whom you meet in the general theatre of life, is rather deficient in that way. To be quite frank, one of the tasks we have before us is to rescue ourselves from the tyranny of the monopoly that these people have got of that particular kind of talent.

There is another great difficulty in doing that. Very much abler men than they are, serve their country in the army and the navy, in the civil service and in the Government. But these gentlemen are practically insatiable. What is more, they do not understand their own silly business in a political sense.

The Employer in the Old System.

Take now, for example, the man who is rally master of the modern situation, and that is the financier. In the nineteenth century, the American economic man, John Walker, wrote a study of the industrial situation, and he said the employer was unquestionably the master of it; and that was so. The employer was the man who organized labor, without whom all the other classes were entirely helpless. The employer turned to the landlord, on the one hand, the helpless landlord; he turned to the helpless capitalist, on the other, and he said to the landlord: "You have got a lot of land, and you do not know how to make a farthing out of it; hand your land over to me, and I will pay you so much." He said to the capitalist: "You do not know how to employ that capital industriously"; and the capitalist said: "Certainly not; I am a gentleman, I am not a trader." The employer said: "Very well, give me your capital, I will use it, and pay you so much." In the same way he said to the laborer: "I will pay for your labor, I will pay you a living wage, and organize your labor so that plenty of money can be made out of it."

The employer was undoubtedly the cock of the walk. Now he is a proletarian. There has been a complete change. Not only have all the secrets of employment been so largely found out; it was a new thing, remember, in the nineteenth century, this organization of labor on the modern scale, but now it can be acquired by everybody; education has spread, so that people are not cut off now through want of education from it as they were before.

But there is another thing. The sums that are required to finance business are enormously larger than they used to be. My father, after being a civil servant went into business, without the slightest knowledge of business; but he went into business. I do not know what his capital was. I dare say, between him and his partner, they may have had a couple of thousand pounds, or something like that; and that was quite common. Well, look at the latest reports of the merger, as they call it, of which Sir Alfred Mond appears to be chief. I forget if it is fifty millions or fifty thousand millions; it does not matter much. The main thing is that these colossal sums are sums which are utterly beyond the capacity of an ordinary employer to collect. He cannot get them from his friends, they are too large, and his banker will not allow him to overdraw to that extent. He finds himself quite helpless.

He discovers that he has to go to a special, a new class of men, whose business it is to collect large sums of money, promoters. He has to go to these men, and he says: "I want a large capital, or I cannot go on; I want twenty thousand pounds." They kick him out of the office, saying: "Do you suppose we would dirty our fingers with things of that kind? Go to your own broker. Get out!" If, smarting under that treatment, he says: "Will you get me seventy thousand pounds?" they say: "Well, it is not much, but if you will take seventy thousand pounds and call it a hundred thousand pounds and pay interest on a hundred thousand pounds and assume the responsibility of having borrowed a hundred thousand pounds, perhaps we will give you the seventy thousand pounds." That is really the sort of thing that goes on, and the result is that the financiers and the bankers are the men who really now are masters of the industrial situation, and the employer has practically gone. • • •

The Fabian Solution.

On the whole I must dismiss, I think, the Clissold gentleman, the financier and the employer and the organizer of business. I do not say that he has not ideals. I do not like his ideals. As far as he has any ideals at all, they appear to me on the whole to be mischief. They may be excellent in the money market, but the money market is only a corner of the world, and it is the rest of the world we have to deal with.

After all, it comes back to the old Fabian solution. There is no use in imagining that you are going to have a great international culture, in which all people will think alike. In our time and for some time to come you will do a great deal if you can bring all the different peoples to think alike even on one point, and I suggest to you that there is some reasonable chance of their getting to think alike on the great question of the distribution of wealth, of getting them to think that the present distribution of wealth is extraordinarily unsatisfactory, that it is ridiculous, that it is gross, that it is absurd, that it has gone beyond all endurance, that it has become simply a bad joke and a very mischievous one. Everybody knows that.

Indeed, if we stick at our Fabian work of advocating socialism, which really means advocating redistribution, I think a great many people who differ from us in the ordinary sense collaterally will be coming with us.

Chesterton's "Distributism."

I have been extraordinarily amused of late by my friend Gilbert Chesterton. I have been lying low for Mr. Chesterton for many years. He scorns socialism. Unlike his brother, Cecil Chesterton, he would not join the Fabian Society; he was disgusted with the whole thing, the whole conception of bureaucracy, the loss of liberty and all the rest of it. He invented a new thing himself, and, curiously enough, the first thing I smiled at was that he called this new thing not socialism but distributism, which, by the way, is rather a better name for socialism than socialism, because it describes it, and after preaching that what you want is a redistribution of property and doing it in a rather vague way, never coming down to tin tacks, giving you a sort of vision of Chesterton under his own vine and fig tree, with a nice little rivulet going through his garden and he digging the soil and producing wheat and that kind of thing—the sort of life that would make him commit suicide if he had ten days of it.

But he never came nearer to it than that until the other day, when he was suddenly plunged into practical politics by the coal strike. He settled the coal strike and his remedy is nationalization of the coal. He begins absolutely with a measure which sweeps away all his little private property plans—they are all gone, and behold Mr. Chesterton a full-blown Socialist, although he has adopted a coal culture which many of us cannot dissent from. What does that matter if he agrees with us on that side?

If we find that all over the world people are being driven by mere pressure of circumstances to apply their minds to this, then I think there is some hope, as I say, in our time of getting a sort of common belief that may unite the peoples of the world in a movement which is the only possible solution, and that solution is equal distribution, because you have nothing to do but try any other solution that can be proposed, and you will find that it won't work, that it is impossible. That would rid us of over-population, it would rid us of poverty, it would rid us of that moral evil which Mr. Wells has very rightly called attention to, the resentment complex, which is so very general. All that would be worth trying. • • •

I suggest that our old panaceas, the redistribution of wealth, the introduction of socialism, is the one thing in which I see any hope of a union for the whole proletarian world. Accordingly, my advice to you Fabians is not to let yourselves run away on Clissoldism or on international cultures or anything of the kind, but to learn the old game, the old Socialist game, and peg away at it.

SHAW'S HOPE FOR "INTERNATIONALISM"

THERE is no use in imagining that you are going to have a great international culture in which all people will think alike. In our time and for some time to come, you will do a great deal if you can bring all the different peoples to think alike even on one point, and I suggest to you that there is some reasonable chance of their getting to think alike on the great question of the distribution of wealth, of getting them to think that the present distribution of wealth is extraordinarily unsatisfactory, that it is ridiculous, that it is gross, that it is absurd, that it has gone beyond all endurance, that it has become simply a bad joke and a very mischievous one. • • • If we find that all over the world people are being driven by mere pressure of circumstances to apply their minds to this, then I think there is some hope, as I say, in our time of getting a sort of common belief that may unite the peoples of the world in a movement which is the only possible solution—and that solution is equal distribution.

NEEDLE TRADES REVOLT AGAINST COMMUNISM

By LOUIS STARK.

THE revolt against communism in the needle trades is drawing to a climax. A drama, vivid, compelling, sinister and fraught with tragedy, is moving to a swift dénouement. Nearly 150,000 workers in the New York needle trades, who, with their families, constitute three-quarters of a million souls, are awaiting the outcome of the struggle between the combined Left Wing and Communist leaders and the anti-Communists.

Beyond the ranks of the New York needle trades workers are the hundreds of thousands of trade unionists in needle trade organizations in other cities. Their eyes are turned toward New York. The circle of interest is much broader, however. It includes the entire labor movement of the United States, as exemplified by the American Federation of Labor, the non-A. F. of L. unions and the anti-Federation unions in this country. That the leaders of the Communist International and the Red Trade Union International are interested in the situation is evident.

The struggle, which began when the 35,000 members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union stopped work on July 1 last, is no ordinary strike. To the newspaper reader the strike appears "just another move for higher wages and shorter hours." It is more. Behind the façade of demands, propaganda and counter-propaganda two principles of trade union tactics have come to grips. The American Federation of Labor's principle of peaceful settlements of disputes wherever possible and cooperation in industry between employer and employe is being opposed by the weapon of the general strike and the principle of "no class collaboration," as advocated in Moscow.

Five Unions Represented.

There are approximately 150,000 workers employed in the needle trades in New York. They have membership principally in five unions, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, the Fur Workers' Union, the Cloth Hat and Cap Makers, the Millinery Workers' International Union and the Pocketbook Workers' Union. Each has had its tussle with communism. Vigorous action in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers reduced the Left Wing and Communist influence to impotence. It is a negligible element in the Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' Union and in the pocketbook workers' organization. At present it is strongest in New York in the Joint Board of Furriers, controlling 10,000 fur workers. It is in the Cloakmakers' Union, however, that the struggle has become most dramatic.

The Bolshevist seizure of power in Russia in 1917 was followed with manifestations of sympathy in the New York needle trades. At that time the needle workers here favored the Soviet program as a step toward the fulfillment of the radical program in the United States. Many were gradually estranged by the excesses in Russia. The 1921 depression in the needle trades was seized upon by the local Communists, who blamed the more conservative leaders for the situation.

Two years ago Governor Smith averted a strike of 35,000 cloakmakers by having all factors agree to the appointment of a commission to make a thorough investigation of the industry. The policy of Morris Sigman, President of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, was aimed to make the jobbers responsible for labor conditions in the industry. The latter employ no labor, but supply materials to submanufacturers who make up garments on order. Union, submanufacturers and "inside manufacturers," with shops of their own, place the blame for demoralization of the industry on the shoulders of the jobbers, who maintain that since they employ no labor directly they cannot be responsible for labor conditions.

The Communists, opposed to the work of the Governor's Commission, which was the first body to make a thorough survey of the industry, kept up their attack on it and at the convention of the union last year presented a drastic program which included pronouncement against arbitration until after a strike, no mediation, non-recognition of the Governor's Commission, "no class collaboration," the right to strike during the term of an agreement and a guarantee of thirty-six week's work a year.

The program was ridiculed by the experienced union leaders, who permitted its adoption, however, because it was the program of the Left Wing and Communist elements of the union, then in control of the Joint Board (an Executive Committee representing every local in New York affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union). The Joint Board is generally an autonomous body responsible to the members and in the main independent of the International Union.

The adoption of the program of the New York Communists, somewhat modified, was the culmination of a struggle during the entire Summer of 1925, when the International Union filed charges against seventy-seven local officials, charging them with membership in the Workers' (Communist) Party and the Trade Union Educational League, as well as with having made slanderous attacks on the International Union officials. The suspended officials seized the machinery of three local unions in the Joint Board, issued pamphlets attacking the administration, and agitated against the payment of dues to the Joint Board, then in control of the more moderate elements.

President Sigman agreed that some of the Communist criticism was justified and compelled the resignation of several of the administration officials on the Joint Board. This was in pursuance of his policy launched when he became head of the union three years ago. His campaign was conducted so quietly that the membership knew little of his work. Since then he has felt that perhaps it was a mistake not to advertise his work, as was the policy of his opponents.

At any rate, his policy of "a clean union" caused division in his own ranks because of the resignation of some administration followers. An election was held and the Left Wing and Communist group, led by Louis Hyman, obtained control of the Joint Board and with it the destinies of 70,000 garment workers in this city, including dressmakers and others who are not engaged in the present strike.

When the Governor's Committee made its report last Summer the Sigman group favored acceptance as a basis for negotiation. The Left Wing and Communist elements, already committed to a "no class collaboration" policy, on record against mediation and the Governor's Commission and for general strikes, rejected the report and the strike began on July 1. The Sigman policy was aimed at the jobbers, but the Left Wing and Communist leaders on the General Strike Committee made their attack on the Industrial Council of Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers, employers with shops of their own who engaged union labor and who gave steadier employment, higher earnings and better conditions than obtained in the shops working for the jobbers. The inside manufacturers and the contractors had accepted the report. The jobbers rejected it.

After twenty weeks the Left Wing and Communist leadership signed an agreement with the inside manufacturers in which they gave up an important union privilege which they had retained for fifteen years as a result of a score of years of previous effort. Notably the inside manufacturers won the right to hire and fire 10 per cent. of their personnel three times within the life of the two and a half year agreement. Previously an employe retained his job if after a trial period of two weeks he was found to be satisfactory.

The Governor's Commission recommended that jobbers limit their orders to a certain group of submanufacturers each season, as this would make for stability. This limitation of contractors was one of the union's principal demands, but it is in effect waived in the agreement with the inside manufacturers. The demand that the employers guarantee work for thirty-six weeks a year also went by the board.

The union won a slight increase in minimum wage scales. The forty-four-hour week was reduced to forty-two for the first eighteen months of the agreement and thereafter forty hours will prevail.

A difficult task was before the Left Wing and Communist leaders, who were compelled by the force of circumstances to sign the new agreement. Had they waited the manufacturers would have made other arrangements for the new season and this would have included installation of open shop conditions, removal out of town by some, and refusal to sign any wage agreement with the union whatever. To save the remnants of the union from the débâcle and to "put over" the agreement, the Workers (Communist) Party called a meeting of all its party members who were members of the union. In the letter sent out by Joseph Zack, Secretary of the Industrial Department, District 2, 108 East Fourteenth Street, on Nov. 12, 1926, the members were told that it was important "to prepare for the meetings that will be held to approve the settlement made with the Industrial Council."

"There can be nothing more important for you, at this time, than to attend the meeting," the letter said. "We will check up on the attendance."

Under the Secretary's signature was the following postscript: "William Z. Foster will be present at the meeting."

Foster is organizer of the Trade Union Educational League, one of the subsidiary branches of the Workers Party. The object of the League is to "bore from within" the existing unions and capture them in order to extend the influence of the Workers Party, which is affiliated with the Third International and the Red Trade Union International.

Several days after the meeting the strike settlement was approved by the members, who had listened to explanations by the Left Wing and Communist Joint Board leaders. Hardly had the ink on the document dried before the Left Wing and Communist leaders began an attack against the Sigman administration, which was charged with "betraying the union." The International Union President remained silent until last week, when he made a long statement to the General Executive Board, charging the Left Wing and Communist faction with "criminal negligence" in handling the strike and demanding that its leaders resign. The first gun by the rank and file was a spontaneous meeting, arranged within a few hours at Cooper Union. The Communist leadership was criticised bitterly and called on to relinquish its offices.

The revolt may bring out further details concerning the $3,000,000 expenditures on the strike, which was accompanied by invasion of shops by gangsters and attacks on employes. The strike has depleted the union treasury, left the organization in debt, wiped out the small cash reserves of the members and reduced many to the point of starvation. It has also resulted in the manufacture of many thousands of dollars' worth of cloaks in out-of-town shops beyond union control.

A "united front" of the Left Wing and Communist faction in the other needle trades is being formed to carry on the fight against the adherents of the International Union. This is likely to result in a smaller organization by American Federation of Labor unions which are deeply interested in the effort to eradicate Communism from the American labor movement.

Furrier Communists.

Prominent in the movement for the "united front" by the Communists in other organizations is Ben Gold, head of the Joint Board of the Furriers Union, who conducted a seventeen weeks' strike ending last Summer, with a loss by the union of nearly every demand. Gold rose to power at the 1925 convention of the International Fur Workers Union. The Communist activity in that convention became apparent when a telegram came into possession of the anti-Communists, sent by C. E. Ruthenberg, Executive Secretary of the Workers' Party, to William Weinstone, an organizer of the party, who was in attendance at the convention, but not as a delegate. Ruthenberg made several suggestions to Weinstone, giving him definite instructions on how to advance the interests of the Communists at the convention. Ruthenberg has not disavowed authorship of the telegram.

Gold's conduct of the furriers' strike is now under investigation by a committee appointed by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor.

Gold has been one of the principal opponents of the leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who eradicated Communist influence in the organization. He, Charles Zimmerman, Vice President of the General Strike Committee of the cloak makers and Joseph Boruchovitz, also a member of the strike committee, recently attacked the head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as having withheld financial support from the cloakmakers' strike and thus "sabotaged" the walkout. The Amalgamated has given $200,000 in loans to the strikers, one cash donation of $27,500, and has levied an assessment of $1 a member (or $30,000), to help the cloak strikers.

Sidney Hillman, President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, has perhaps been closer to the Russian Communist movement than have any of the important leaders in the needle trades. In 1922 he returned from Russia to organize the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, designed to establish clothing factories in Soviet Russia, partly with American money and partly with money contributed by the Russians. Local Communists hailed him as comrade, but his stock with the Communists fell when he refused to place the union at their disposal.

There was a sharp struggle. Hillman chose Abraham Beckerman, a man of action and one of the union's strongest leaders, as his aid. The Communist grip was broken and Beckerman became master of the New York Joint Board. Hillman and Beckerman are now regarded by the extremists as "reactionaries" and "betrayers of the union." The most frequent cry of the powerless Communists is: "Down with Hillmanism."

The Communists have a picturesque vocabulary and make frequent use of invective. Their enemies are "racketeers," "gangsters," "Fascists," "slavers," "lackey of the capitalist class," "bureaucrat," "betrayer," "sellout" and "jobholder." Their friends are called "active union leaders." Their press is filled with cartoons curiously reminiscent of similar material in the Soviet publications.

The Cloth Hat and Cap Makers' and Millinery Workers' Union and the Pocketbook Workers' Union also had their differences with the Left Wing and Communist elements and also reduced them to impotence. A peace agreement, which followed a general strike of cap makers, gave them control over the jobber, wage increases, a shorter work week with forty hours a week next year, unemployment insurance to be contributed solely by the employer and administered by the union. The Communists denounced the agreement as "a betrayal."

The millinery workers, a small organization of the cap makers, had a disastrous strike six years ago under Left Wing guidance, and the survivors were required to repair the damage. The union recently defeated the Communists for membership on the executive committee, which is shortly to meet with the employers for the purpose of signing a new agreement.

Although the entire labor movement has been subjected to the attacks of the Communists working through the Trade Union Educational League in the Jewish labor movement, particularly the needle trades, has been most affected. Discontent is fertile soil for propaganda. The seasonal nature of the needle trades, the long periods of unemployment, the small unit of production and the frequent change of styles work to confront employers here with problems found in few other industries.

Purpose of the League.

The object of the Trade Union Educational League, according to a pamphlet published by the league, is "to turn the workers' eyes toward the establishment of a Communist society through the dictatorship of the proletariat." The league is to help build the Workers (Communist) Party.

"The league recognizes the futility of carrying on the trade union work merely for itself," says the document. "The chief aim of all its efforts shall be the building of the revolutionary mass political organizations of the working class, the Workers Party. To this end all the struggles of the workers shall be directed into political channels, and all the campaigns of the league for the Labor Party, amalgamation, &c., shall be utilized to strengthen the membership and leadership of the Workers Party.

"The league recognizes the impossibility of its functioning effectively without the full and whole-hearted support of the Workers Party. To develop this support it shall carry on a campaign to bring all the working class members of the party into the unions and into the league, to make them subscribers to the Class Struggle Propaganda fund and to have each branch and official of the Workers Party held responsible by the Workers Party for the establishment, maintenance and functioning of the league in their respective localities."

From the foregoing it appears that the league is under control of the Workers Party, its chief aim being to build the Workers Party. Industrial struggles, like that of the cloakmakers' strike, are therefore to be used for political ends, the main object being "the dictatorship of the proletariat."

Members of the league meet in advance of regular union meetings, decide upon their policies and attempt to swing the majority of the union (unaware of the secret action of the nucleus) to their side. Sometimes they succeed, for members of the league vote as a unit. To place the interests of the union ahead of those of the Communist Party results in disciplining for the offender. The revolt now in full swing in the cloakmakers' union is the attempt by the rank and file to rid the union of the proponents of the foregoing policies, which the former hold to be responsible for the weakened condition of the organization that was for years the most powerful union in the needle trades.

FIRST RADIO CROSSED SEA 25 YEARS AGO

Marconi in Newfoundland Caught It on A Wire Dangling From a Kite

By ORRIN E. DUNLAP Jr.

RADIO fell out of the nest of scie...e twenty-five years ago at Poldhu, Cornwall, on the southwest tip of England, and fluttered across the sea carrying the first transatlantic ethereal signal to Guglielmo Marconi, who was listening in on the coast of Newfoundland on Dec. 12, 1901. Marconi had sailed from England late in November that year and on Dec. 6 had landed at St. Johns, N. F., accompanied by two assistants, G. S. Kemp and A. Paget.

Immediately these pioneers had begun to install their wireless instruments in the old barracks of Signal Hill, which stood at the mouth of the harbor, a mile and a half from St. John's. Little publicity accompanied Marconi's arrival, but reports had been circulated that he would attempt to communicate with transatlantic ships as they passed about 300 miles off the Grand Banks. As restrained in his statements as he is brilliant in his inventions, he always knew what he could do, but was very careful in remarking upon what he might do.

On Dec. 10, four days after landing at St. Johns, Marconi sent up a nine-foot hexagonal kite with bamboo frame and silk covering. The kite did not get far into the air when the strong wind snapped the wire and the kite blew out to sea. A fourteen foot hydrogen balloon was then sent aloft, but the antenna wire broke away and fell to the ground as the balloon was freed to drift off into the heavy haze that hovered over the sea.

The Momentous Day.

Then came on Dec. 12 a blustery, raw day, but important in the annals of wireless. On this eventful morning Marconi trusted another kite to the Canadian breeze and it was carried to an elevation of about 400 feet. The silk covered frame held the antenna wire firmly as it poised in the upper strata of the air.

Before leaving the British Isles, Marconi had given instructions to the operators at Poldhu to send the letter "S," at a fixed time each day, beginning as soon as word was received that St. Johns was ready to listen. He cabled for the tests to being at 11:30 A. M. and to continue until 2:30 P. M., St. John's time, on Dec. 12, 1901.

The huge induction coils at Poldhu were put into action producing a current sufficient to light three hundred incandescent lamps. An operator pressed the sending key by a lever of wood three feet long, because it was dangerous for a man to get too close to the high voltage apparatus. Sparks leaped for the knobs of the big Leyden jars, illuminating the room like lightening flashes and creating a deafening sound like the rat-a-tat-tat of a machine gun.

Marconi wearing the headphones, was sitting in a tomb-like silence carefully adjusting the tuning coils to the wave length of Poldhu. At noon Marconi thought he heard a signal and he handed the phones to one of his companions to verify the reception. Distinctly and unmistakably came the three dots forming the letter "S." At 1:10 P. M., more signals were audible, and at 2:20 P. M., Marconi again picked up the spark still sending "S." The Atlantic had been spanned by wireless.

Doubting Thomases.

Some asked why the letter "S" was selected as the signal. Marconi explained that it was a letter easily recognized, while others said that it was the ether's signal for "Success."

On the following day, Friday, the three men heard Poldhu again, but on Saturday no impulses actuated the detector, chiefly because of adverse atmospheric conditions, fluctuations in the elevation of the kite and the extreme delicacy of the receiving instruments.

Marconi realized that the world would be skeptical if he announced that he had picked up a message over a distance of 2,000 miles without the aid of cables or wires. He waited two days before he issued a statement to the press. Many were unconvinced that such communication was possible and it was not until February, 1902, when Marconi on board the S. S. Philadelphia copied messages radiated from Poldhu, 1,551 miles away, that he won acknowledgement from those who had doubted his first transatlantic achievement.

Guglielmo Marconi was born in Bologna, Italy, on April 25, 1874. His father, Joseph Marconi, was Italian and his mother, Anna Jameson, was Irish. It has been suggested that he inherited the power of invention from his father's side of the family and Irish persistence, initiative and alertness from his mother. He was educated at Bologna University. History records him as a modest and conservative scientist. He never had to withdraw a statement as to his progress, nor has he ever made a claim of being the first wireless experimenter. Inventor of the system of wireless telegraphy that bears his name has been always prompt to acknowledge the work of others.

One writer said, "Marconi's creation, like that of the poet who puts the words of men in perfect lyric, was none the less brilliant and original." Sir William Preece in commenting upon Marconi's achievement said: "We all knew the egg, but Marconi showed us how to stand it on end." The first transatlantic signal inspired the following comment of Sir Oliver Lodge:

"The present is an epoch of astounding activity in applied science. Progress is a thing of months and weeks, almost of days. The long lines of isolated ripples of past discovery seem blending into a mighty wave, on the crest of which one begins to discern some oncoming magnificent generalization. The suspense is becoming feverish, at times almost painful. One feels like a boy who has been long strumming on the silent keyboard of a deserted organ, into the chest of which an unseen power begins to blow a vivifying breath. Astonished, he now finds that the touch of the fingers elicits a responsive note, and he hesitates, half-delighted, half-affrighted, lest he should be deafened by the chords which it seems he can now summon almost at his will."

The general public on both sides of the Atlantic accepted Marconi's new announcement at its face value and did not become excited by the news, or take it seriously. The impression seemed to prevail that the transmission of signals not confined to wires, but broadcast into the infinite, would be of little or no practical value. The radio pioneers were aware that the first telephone and telegraph instruments had been received in their day with the same skepticism. The world had failed to learn any lesson from great inventions of the past and Marconi's apparatus was listed in the average mind as a toy. Sending thoughts through the air to a point hundreds of miles away was inconceivable.

International Newsreel.

Guglielmo Marconi, Inventor of the Wireless Telegraph, Holding His First Transmitter.

Done With Crude Instruments.

Marconi was asked if he considered it possible some day for Paris to talk with New York without the use of cables, and he said: "I see no reason to doubt it. What are a few thousand miles to this wonderful ether which brings us light every day for millions of miles?"

Marconi, undaunted by the skepticism of the public, continued his experiments. A more powerful station was built at Clifden, Ireland, in 1905, and two years later this plant was opened for limited commercial service with a station at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. Poldhu continued in service until the Summer of 1922.

Today, when millions of homes are equipped with broadcast receivers, it is easier for the public to appreciate the marvel of Marconi's initial transatlantic triumph. The single wire antenna dangling from the uncertain kite was an extremely slender target for the invisible waves wafted across 2,000 miles of curving ocean from Poldhu's pendent wire hung from a 210-foot mast.

As engineers pause today to look back upon ec. 12, 1901, they say that one of the best modern receiving set- using a network of wires might fail to intercept such feeble impulses as were radiated from that old spark transmitter in England.

Marconi was obliged to depend upon the action of an old-fashioned coherer, unfamiliar to the modern radio man. The coherer was the detector! It consisted of a tube filled with iron filings, with silver plugs at each end of the slender container. The impulses picked up by the antenna passed through the coherer and magnetized the iron filings, thereby shifting their position so that the feeble current might pass through. This in turn created a condition, however crude, that caused a local battery to act and sent more current into the circuit, operating the phones in accordance with the incoming dots and dashes. The most enthusiastic radio fan today would soon become tired and discouraged of listening in if he had to use a coherer instead of the vacuum tube detector and amplifiers.

Marconi's transatlantic achievement brought him to the front as the leading wireless experimenter and he was credited as the inventor of this method of communication. After a chronological review of the events prior to the taking out of Marconi's first patent in 1896, the United States District Court, Eastern District of New York, on March 17, 1914, in an opinion handed down by Judge Van Vechten Veeder upheld the validity and priority of the inventor's patents.

In the words of the Court: "To sum up the results of this period of speculation and experiment, the conclusion is reached that no one had described and demonstrated the system of wireless telegraph apparatus adapted for the transmission and reception of definite and intelligible signals by such means. This was the state of scientific knowledge and practice, when in 1896 Marconi applied for his first patent."

Since the letter "S" first sped across the sea a...the speed of sunlight, the inventor has worked faithfully in his laboratories ashore and afloat to perfect radio, making it more useful, efficient and economical as a public service. His latest success is the short wave beam system placed in operation a few weeks ago between London and Montreal. A similar system will soon be working between England and South Africa, India and Australia. This new method of transmission concentrates the radio energy in a beam as the reflector enables the searchlight to flash a shaft of light in a desired direction. In this way power is conserved, high speed transmission upward of 200 words a minute is attained and more secrecy is obtained, because the waves do not radiate to all points of the compass.

Marconi on the Future.

In a recent address before the Institute of Civil Engineers in London Senatore Marconi said: "In the early days of wireless we only spoke of 'wireless telegraphy,' but with the advance of the art electric waves have been more widely utilized not only for wireless telegraphy but for wireless telephony, broadcasting, direction finding at sea and in the air, for the control of mechanisms at a distance, such as targets, torpedoes, flying machines and other similar devices used principally for war purposes, and, more recently, for transmission of pictures and facsimilies and television.

"I hope you will not think me too visionary if I say that it may be possible that some day electric waves may be used for transmission of power over moderate distances, should we succeed in perfecting devices for projecting the waves in parallel beams in such a manner as to minimize the dispersion and diffusion of energy into space.

LONDON SHOWS US HOW TO WIPE OUT THE SLUM

Experience of the British Metropolis Holds Lessons for New York, Which Seeks a Way to Abolish its Mean Streets and Drab Tenements

AUGUST HECKSCHER'S proposal for a block of model tenements in New York City has brought forward the whole problem of a solution of the housing question in slum districts. In this regard London sets an example to New York. Some time ago that city vigorously attacked its slum problem and much has been achieved. When all housing schemes now in hand or contemplated by the London County Council are carried out, new and healthful accommodation will have been provided for 250,000 people heretofore inhabiting for the most part mean and disease-infested hovels. In the following article what London has accomplished is set forth and the problem there and in New York compared.

By JOHN MacCORMAC.

LONDON.

SLUMS are the ever present problem of the big city. They are its inevitable, though not its exclusive, product. They are the faith tossed into eddies by restless energies of urban activity; the skeleton in the municipal cupboard; an indictment against civilization and the doctrine of laissez faire.

In a metropolis like New York, London or Paris, the slum problem becomes acute. New York, determined to grapple adequately with its own situation, has been studying the experience of other cities. From London, particularly, it may be able to learn much.

England, which originated laissez faire as a convenient creed for the pioneer of an age of iron and steam, has reaped a long and bitter harvest of slums. The slums of London became a byword. They drew Jack London to his namesake city to write "The People of the Abyss." Wherever English is spoken "Like a London slum" became a descriptive phrase.

Slums cannot be abolished by act of Parliament, but legislation is a necessary preliminary to that vigorous administrative action which in London has proved the sovereign remedy. The Houses of the Working Classes act of 1890 was, and still is, the "housing charter" of London and the country. It gives the London County Council power to clear large insanitary areas while small ones may be treated either by the council or by metropolitan borough councils. Whether new houses are to be built rests with the Minister of Health. Either the council or the metropolitan borough councils may buy land or erect houses thereon.

Local Authorities Restricted.

Experience has shown that the act fails in one radical respect. Local authorities are allowed to acquire insanitary areas only to pull down the existing houses and build others in their place. Private enterprise is free to acquire the same class of property solely for reconditioning purposes. Experience has shown that this far less costly process can in some cases be made to pay its own way, which is more than can be said, since the war, for any other method of treatment. A new act to give local authorities such power will probably be introduced next year.

The much criticised Housing act, passed by the Lloyd George coalition Government in 1919, did one great thing for slum reform. Before its passage neither did the State contribute directly to the cost of slum clearances nor was it recognized as a matter of law that the owners of insanitary property should suffer financial loss by the compulsory acquirement of their own land and houses. Section 9 of this act determines the price of insanitary property and, according to Colonel Levita, has in large degree set the pace for the abolition of slums.

This section embodies a principle generally recognized as just: That the owner of insanitary property is to be classed in some respects with the purveyor of bad meat.

The English Public Health acts contain a number of useful provisions for dealing with the dirty tenant—the man who, in the words of a Ministry of Health Commissioner, is "the bugbear of owners and local authorities alike—who is almost as busy in creating slums as the authorities are in trying to get rid of them."

The greatest definite legislative advance ever made by any public authority toward slum clearance in London was the agreement made by the London County Council with the Minister of Health in 1923. Under it the Government contracted to pay pound for pound with the Council to a total annual loss of $500,000. A program designed to begin immediately and to continue for sixty years was based upon it.

For a decade after the passing of the Housing of the Working Classes act in 1890, such houses as were built for the London poor were the fruit almost entirely of private enterprise. After that date the source proved inadequate. Since the war not only has the private builder practically disappeared from the picture but the Council itself has had to call upon the assistance of the Government.

Much has been accomplished; much remains to be done—for there are still slums in London. At a recent conference of the British National Council of Women it was stated that 147,797 families live in one-room homes and 236,856 families in two-room homes. According to the 1925 report of the Church Assembly, 1,000,000 of Greater London's 8,000,000 inhabitants are still grossly overcrowded. But there are no slums in the old dreadful sense of the word. Less than a hundred years ago London housing conditions were really appalling.

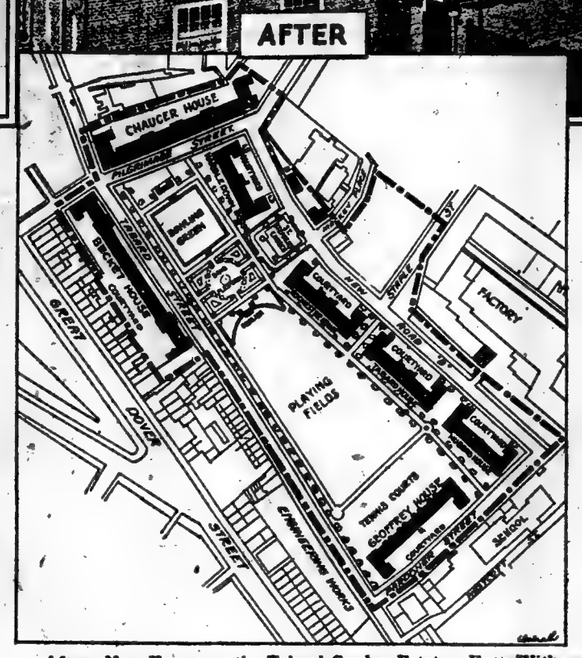
A Row of Five-Story Dwellings That Replaced the Rookeries.



After—Now Known as the Tabard Garden Estate. Even With Open Spaces It Houses 2,380 Compared With 3,300 Before.

A London County Council report quotes Dr. Southwood Smith as pointing out that in 1842 whole districts in Bethnal Green and Whitechapel were without drainage or a supply of water; that houses sometimes only eight feet square and eight feet high were built without foundations, on open marshland. That famous philanthropist, the Earl of Shaftesbury, cited in 1885 houses that had to be cleared of vermin by fire engines; a house built over a sewer, with a hole in the floor through which sewer rats passed twenty at a time into the lower room, and houses in Bermondsey built upon piles over a swamp into which all filth was cast and from which water for washing and drinking was drawn.

What Has Been Done.

There are no slums in London today in that sense, and every year sees fewer and fewer of any sort. Since 1876 over 100 acres of insanitary property have been cleared and new accommodation provided thereon or in other areas for 50,000 slum dwellers thus displaced. This might be described as slum surgery—the removal of diseased tissue and its replacement by healthier growths. A great work has also been accomplished in what might be called preventive hygiene—in other words, the provision of sufficient housing accommodation to prevent that congestion which is one of the main causes of the growth of slums.

Since 1919 the London County Council has undertaken and partly completed schemes for the clearance of ninety-two acres of slums, which will displace 25,245 persons, rehousing 18,189 of them within the same areas and 5,089 elsewhere. The cost of clearance and roadwork will be £1,145,200 and the cost of rehousing will be about £2,000,000. Under this scheme eighteen blocks of tenements and seventy-two three-story cottage flats, to accommodate 6,000 persons, have already been built.

Up to March 31, 1926, the capital expenditure on all dwellings and estates, including clearance of unhealthy areas and advances toward the provision of houses by private enterprise, was £20,384,000. Accomodation for 142,000 persons has been provided under both slum clearance and building schemes in 22,085 tenements and cottages and three lodging houses with 1,880 cubicles, the prewar and postwar dwellings being 9,085 and 12,396 respectively. When all schemes now in hand or contemplated are carried out the Council's estates will accommodate 250,000 people.

The history of London slum removal has been largely the history of the London County Council. Here is the story as the Council itself tells it:

"The London County Council's ambition is a healthy mind and a healthy body for every Londoner. The Council, then, clears away slums and builds new houses for the poor so that they may have an equal chance with their neighbors for a healthy, happy life. These two branches of the work must keep pace. It is of little use to clear slums if the persons displaced are forced into other quarters already fully occupied. If new accommodation is not provided, new slums will at once be created—perhaps in the next street or the same neighborhood.

"The kind of unhealthy area which we meet most frequently consists of cottages built a hundred years or more, during and just after the wars with Napoleon. Very often these cottages were not more than ten or twelve feet apart, from front to front, and on the ground floor were practically back to back. The only through ventilation was between a narrow alley and a tiny yard shut in on all sides. About 150 such cottages, containing perhaps 600 persons, could be squeezed on to an acre. Today, even in thickly populated Southwark, Shoreditch or Bethnal Green, the number of persons to the acre averages about 160, and in London as a whole 60.

Dampness and Danger.

"Often the lower floors of these houses would be below the level of the pavement outside, and as damp courses were unknown there was nothing to prevent the dampness rising, as it did, nearly to the top of the rooms on the ground floor. The side walls were not bonded into the front walls, and slight settlements would draw one away from the other. The front walls would then threaten the passers-by, and the roofs, besides admitting rain, might at any time collapse upon the tenants.

"The destruction of such slums, with their dark, overcrowded, insanitary houses and their high death-rates, is a process neither easy nor swift. In the first place, the local medical officer of health has to be convinced that an area is unhealthy and that 'the most satisfactory method of dealing with the evils arising therefrom is by an improvement scheme for the rearrangement of the neighborhood and the reconstruction of the houses.' Then the Council, if satisfied, makes a scheme, and notice thereof is served upon all persons interested. The next step is for the Council to ask the Minister of Health to confirm the scheme and the latter orders a local inquiry, at which persons interested may appear to state their case—and usually do so in large numbers.

"Even if the Council gets its scheme approved, the work is little more than begun. As many of the owners of the property are convinced that the whole affair is merely another example of authority intruding into their private concerns, negotiations for its purchase do not always proceed smoothly. Terms are finally agreed, or, failing agreement, are settled by arbitration.

"Now, surely, the old houses can be swept away and a start made with the new buildings. But no, the tenants must be got rid of, and these are loath to depart, some because they have no place to which they care to go; others because, strange as it may seem, they are attached to the gloomy hovels where they have lived so long; others, again, for the more sordid but solid reason that the Council will find it difficult to get any rent out of them for so long as they can contrive to remain in occupation.

"Eventually, however, by small payments for removal expenses, by the finding or provision of other accommodation, or by process of law, the tenants are coaxed, cajoled or chivied out.

"During the latter part of the time, the engineers and architects have completed their plans. They are now ready, the old houses are gone at last, the roads widened or laid out afresh, and the new buildings are up and are filled with the new tenants.

"Alternative accommodation while slum areas are being cleared has up to the present been provided by the Council in the dwellings which it has already on hand. By interchanging tenants on its existing estates, accommodation has been created in a large number of old houses or tenements; but this affords only a limited accommodation, and a policy of providing new tenement buildings ahead of the displacements is being actively pursued.

"As an example of what has to be done and the time taken to do it, we may cite the Tabard Street scheme, which related to an area of fourteen and one-half acres, on which were 875 houses, occupied by nearly 4,600 persons. Tabard Street was part of the route used by pilgrims and others between London and Canterbury, made famous by Chaucer in his 'Canterbury Tales.' It had fallen into disuse.

"The street itself, and the streets leading out of it, were narrow, several being less than ten feet wide, and nearly half were blind alleys. Practically all the houses were ill-planned, dark and worn out.

Street of Chaucer's Time.

"The reconstruction scheme, planned in 1912, but interrupted by the war, is now nearly completed. The principal roads, much widened and improved, are being retained; but all the crowded alleys and courts where so many kinds of disease bred and multiplied have been pulled down. In their place a central garden of five acres is being laid out and around this are grouped the new dwellings. Six blocks, accommodating 2,114 persons, are open already, leaving only one for 256 persons to be completed.

"Clearance is done in small sections at a time, each large enough for one block of buildings. The old accommodation has already been described; what of the new? The London County Council on its new estates has confined itself to houses of the cottage type, but with regard to the central congested areas the people already there have to be rehoused in the same areas. This means the erection of five-story blocks. In the Brady Street area, Bethnal Green, 1,600 persons, or 85 per cent. of those displaced, have been rehoused in the same area, though space has also been taken for a recreation ground of one and one-half acres.

"Outside the entrances of the flats on the upper floors of these five-story dwellings there are external balconies connecting with the ground by one or more staircases. These balconies enable smaller children on the upper floors to be put out in the open air under the supervision of their mother. The objection to high buildings on account of the stairs to be climbed is obviated by combining the two uppermost floors into series of two-floor lettings, each having its entrance on the third floor level.

"The development of suburban estates has been one of the most important features of the Council's work. Between 1898 and 1914 about 118 acres had been developed and accommodation provided thereon for 22,000 persons. At Becontree 6,000 houses are being developed for 25,000 to 30,000 persons, but this number is only one-sixth of what we hope to do. On the Bellingham estate 2,090 working-class houses and flats with accommodation for 10,000 have been built.

"We threw Dover House, the seat of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, and Putney Park together to form the Roehampton estate of 147 acres. It is the prettiest of our estates and every effort has been made, as has been made with our other properties, to maintain this attraction."

Compared With New York.

As regards the applicability of London's method of slum removal to New York conditions, the consensus of opinion seems to be that New York is less well served in respect to legislation, but faced by easier construction problems. G. Topham Forrest, architect to the London County Council, noted in his report on the results of an investigation of American building methods undertaken a year ago that it would probably be unconstitutional for the State or municipalities to acquire land for housing or give financial assistance with regard to building, except exemption from taxation.

He has the highest praise, however, for the housing methods of the United States Housing Corporation. As a result of his inquiry into its work he recommended on his return that a scheme be formulated for the erection of wooden houses on the L. C. C.'s estates and that nine-story buildings comprising shops, offices and flats be built on suitable areas acquired under the Council's housing schemes.

The construction problem in New York, as stated, is less difficult than in London. Owing to its more southerly position, buildings four stories higher than those practicable in London could be built without causing greater obstruction to light, or lower buildings could be placed more closely together. The balcony type of block dwelling built in London, on the other hand, would meet with objections in a city liable to prolonged periods of snow or frost.

The American housing standard is higher than that in England, as regards spaciousness of accommodation. What in America would be termed an apartment for the working class would in England, says Mr. Forrest, be considered in many respects superior middle class accommodation. Construction is much less costly in America, however, and the greater height to which blocks of tenements can be carried makes the problem of rehousing slum dwellers in their own areas a comparatively easy one.

One of New York's main problems, it is thought here, would be to find alternative accommodation for those forced out by slum clearances. London, as stated, has been able to meet this need by a rearrangement of the immense number of tenancies already controlled by its County Council. But London will shortly have to adopt a scheme of constructing tenements in advance of the immediate housing demand, and it will probably be in this direction that the remedy will lie for New York.

MAINE ICE TO BE BROKEN FOR HARDY WINTER FISHERS

Government Assigns the Kickapoo to Clear Harbors for Young Captains Courageous

THE Government ice-breaker Kickapoo has been assigned to duty along the Maine coast this Winter, with probable headquarters at Rockland, in Penobscot Bay. The new craft has a steel-encased stem and is protected in other ways which adapt her to the rugged work of keeping such harbors as may be desired open to navigation.

Some years there is almost no ice along Maine's coast, but about every third or fourth season ice seals the harbors and ties up navigation. February is the worst ice month. The embargo lasts not more than a few weeks. Portland has never been closed to navigation, but about every point to the eastward has its occasional troubles.

In the past cutters, towboats and miscellaneous large power craft have been called upon to pick the ice lock. As a result, more than one good wooden vessel has received a ruinous straining. The demand for an ice-breaker has grown out of changing conditions. Formerly all the small fisher boats hauled out not later than Thanksgiving; fishing in a small open sailboat was too much of a risk in winter. The fishermen either signed up on the bank schooners or sought occupation ashore until Spring.

Now, however, marine motors have become about as reliable as steam. The owner of a 25 to 35 foot power craft can fish during the period of hard weather. At Kennebunkport and Cape Porpoise a dozen lobstermen and trawlers will fish through until Spring unless an unusually low temperature freezes up their little hole-in-the-wall harbors, the entrances of which are too hazardous for a sizeable ice-breaker to navigate.

Out of Rockland and Owl's Head there will be the usual number of scallop boats, and considerable lobstering will go on from Monhegan, Matinicus and Crie Haven, Vinal Haven and a few points east. At Portland, Maine's greatest fishing port, Winter means not a cessation but merely a letting down of the fishing industry. The big auxiliary schooners that in Spring and Summer pursue the mackerel and swordfish devote themselves to trawling through the late Fall and Winter.

Winter fishing is not a game for the older men. They avow that in the long run those who attempt it will be the losers. Its exactions silver the hair and stamp fine wrinkles around the eyes. Sturdy striplings are metamorphosed into young oldsters, for frequently they are caught outside in sudden squalls that develop into howling gales. In their hurried sprints for home they are often obliged to leave gear behind. Loss of trawls and lobster pots is likely to cost all the profits of a hitherto lucrative season. Winter, therefore, the oldsters say, is a fine time to remain home to listen to the radio and play with the children.

One young Chebeague Islander was asked why he did not haul out until Spring. His answer voiced the feelings of many. "Well, you see, it's this way. I'm a fisherman. What else can I do? Don't want to loaf around the house, and jobs ashore are mighty scarce. A man ought to keep busy, so I might's well fish as anything.

"Yes, I know it takes a lot out of a fellow to Winter-fish in a small open boat, and he's likely to lose a lot of gear. But—but he's also always got a chance of hitting them right when the market is bare and prices high, and it's the money we want."

TURKEY SUED FOR DAMAGES BY BRITON DENIED HIS ISLE

Century-Old Ownership of Romantic Spot Near Smyrna Has Been Profitless

THE case of Anthony Edwards, Englishman, who is suing the Turkish Government for $255,000 for wrongful seizure of and resultant damages by occupying troops to his island of Uzun Adassi in the Gulf of Smyrna, is soon to come up before the Mixed Anglo-Turkish Arbitral Tribunal.

Uzun Adassi, the Turkish equivalent of Long Island, came into the hands of the Edwards family nearly a hundred years ago, when Anthony Edwards, son of a retired officer in the British Army living in Smyrna, bought it for an unknown sum from its Turkish owners.

Anthony Edwards himself was content to visit it a few times during his lifetime. On his death in 1892 it passed into the hands of his son, who survived his father by only a few years. The grandson, also named Anthony, decided to cultivate and develop his inheritance.

Uzun Adassi is eighteen miles from Smyrna—three and one-half miles long and two wide. The climate is cool and salubrious all the year around, the soil is fertile, and vines, tobacco, almonds, olives and aniseed can be profitably grown.

Toward the end of the last century Ottoman Greek peasants from the mainland settled there, and by 1914 some 2,000 were living on the island. Uzun Adassi thus came under cultivation, but brought its owner no income. Anthony Edwards was in constant unavailing dispute with the peasants and with the Turkish authorities about rents, the island costing him more in taxes to the Smyrna vilayet than he was able to collect from his peasantry.

When Kiamil Pasha, afterward Grand Vizier, became Governor General of the vilayet, Edwards was advised to sell the island to Turkey, which wanted it because of its position. The negotiations for this came to nothing, however, as the Turks offered far less than Edwards was willing to accept. Kiamil Pasha being a just man, recognized the right of Edwards to collect rental, however, and accordingly sent Albanian soldiers to enforce payments. His successors, knowing that Turkey wished to purchase the island, did all they could to make it harder for Edwards to make money out of the island. Again the British Ambassador and other authorities were called on, without avail.

Just before the World War, Edwards was ready to convert Uzun Adassi into a pleasure resort for the wealthy Smyrniots. Its situation and climate made it ideal for the purpose. But the outbreak of the war disturbed these plans, and Edwards, with wife and family, was interned in Smyrna.

At the close of the war it seemed as if Uzun Adassi was to pass forever out of the Edwards family. Temporary help arrived with the Greek Army, which landed at Smyrna, and the island was immediately placed in Edwards's hands. Its name was changed to Drymussa, signifying a sweet-smelling herb. Greek troops cleared the island of fortifications, except the Krupp guns, which were too heavy to remove. The peasants flocked back to their beloved island on hearing of this, although Edwards, it is said, stood on the shore to keep them away. Drymussa again became a prosperous place, rents being enforced by the Greek Government.

The Kemalist advance into Asia Minor forced the Greek troops to leave. Once more the islanders sailed away to Mytilene, and Edwards found himself in a worse position than before.

FEW CHILDREN IN PEWS OF NEW YORK CHURCHES

Justice Crain Says Young Absentees Are Deprived of Teaching That Leads to Security of Life and Property—Clergy Blame Parents—Habits Formed Early

By DIANA RICE.

FIFTY years ago nearly every child went to church. Today most city children do something else on Sunday morning. Is it the fault of the parents, the church or the child? What can be done to change the situation before it is too late? These questions were raised recently at a meeting of clergymen at the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church called by the Greater New York Federation of Churches.

It was pointed out in the course of the meeting, by Justice Thomas C. T. Crain of the Supreme Court, that present conditions could only be described as "tragic" and that the dearth of children at religious services on Sunday morning was "symptomatic of a dying church." Later Justice Crain, when asked to extend his comment on the questions raised, said that not only were existing conditions symptomatic of a dying church, but that a church which countenances "by supine inactivity the absence of the child from the family pew deserves to die."

Various methods of attracting young persons to Sunday morning service have been discussed; many of them have been tried. Whether the appeal should be a popular one, competing in a way with worldly attractions, or whether it should in no way attempt to imitate the secular and dramatic seems to be considered a debatable question. In the opinion of Justice Crain, the appeal of the church must be by contrast, not imitation.

People like variety, he remarked. Attempts to make the appeals of the church like those of the world do violence to the dignity of the church and belittle it in the eyes of the discriminating. Such appeals are confessions of weakness and defeat their object.

Basis of Right Conduct.

"Thoughtful men realize," continued Justice Crain, who is a vestryman of Trinity and a member of the Department of Religious Education of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, "that the Bible lays down and emphasizes the importance of a high moral standard which if lived up to would lead to right conduct between man and man, with resultant security to life and property. Wrongdoing violative of this moral code entails insecurity, brings shame and sorrow, and increases the expense of government.

"Childhood is the impressionable period. It is the teachable stage, and the importance of the things to be taught is measured in the last analysis by their effect upon conduct. The child must early be accustomed to consider actions from the viewpoint of right or wrong. It is recognized that neither inclination nor seeming expediency is to be the governing factor. And emphasis must be laid on the proposition that destiny is dependent upon conduct. If these are truths, then, from the standpoint of one concerned alone with the security of the State and the preservation of civilization, what better place can be found for the inculcation of right principles of action than the Church of God, the expounder and guardian of the moral law?

"The value of the attendance of any person upon divine worship is measured in part by the motives bringing him, and in part by his capacity to receive and willingness to act upon character-building impressions. There is a period of immaturity during which, all will be agreed, a child could derive no benefit from any church service. This period is followed by another during which the benefit is circumscribed by reason of imperfect understanding on the part of the child. In the normal child this is followed by a time when he may be expected to receive as much of good from the service as an adult; tenderness of heart and purity of mind making up for the lesser mental strength which the child possesses when contrasted with the adult.

The Understanding Age.

"In the case of a normal child, the period last referred to may be said to begin at about twelve years of age. Such a child if not brought to public worship is deprived of something which God intended him to have and for which there is no substitute. A religion of the head and of the heart—intelligent, scriptural, spiritual and efficient, should form part of the child's life. If the child grows in knowledge of secular things, vital truths should be imparted to the end that his development may not be one-sided—that he may grow in grace and in the knowledge of God and right.

"Truths must not only be taught but practiced. In fact, the purpose of knowing them is that they may be put into effect, and one of the first effects of religious instruction should be worship. The bent knee, the uplifted heart, the open Bible, a prayer-hearing, prayer-answering God, supplication, aspiration, inspiration, benediction—these are religion, and religion is life—power. What has been said, of course, presupposes that during the course of the church service there will be avowal and confession of wrongdoing, prayer for the needs of the body and soul, a reading of the Bible, the employment of music as an agency of praise and a Scriptural unfolding of the eternal verities constituting the bread of life.

"Fertile and futile are the countless excuses for depriving the child of this heritage secured for him through the blood of the martyrs. The church that countenances by supine inactivity the absence of the child from the family pew is not merely a dying church but one which, unless it changes, deserves to die."

The average family is, to be sure, smaller than it was when the family pew was filled each Sunday morning, but this one fact does not account, it is stated, for present unfilled pews. The argument that church sermons do not hold sufficient interest for young minds, or are over the heads of youthful hearers, is refuted by older churchmen who recall sermons they heard when mere boys and the effect made upon them by those sermons. Grammar grade intelligence is held to be entirely sufficient to make church service, including sermons, as helpful to a child as to an adult.

Suburban Conditions Better.

Those who attend weekly services in various parts of the city know what present conditions are in the churches. One who has visited twenty-five churches of different denominations during the past year reports that not 5 per cent. of the congregation in any of these churches are children. Out of the 6,000,000 population of Greater New York about one-fourth are children of school age; but it appears from a survey that these city children are not being reached by the churches. At least, according to those who made the studies, they are not found in city churches on Sunday morning.

Smaller towns still observe the Sabbath. Many communities in New Jersey and on Long Island make it a rule that golf links shall not be used until after 1 o'clock on Sunday and that places of amusement shall not be opened at all. The attendance at suburban churches is usually large; family life there more or less centres even today around the family pew. The same argument is heard that was heard two decades ago, "Some of us must go and sit in the pew this morning"—an argument usually ended by several members of the family attending service.

While the general opinion appears to be that the majority of city churches are not reaching the child in any appreciable numbers, certain churches are exceptions to this rule. Among those doing outstanding work with children are the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Old First Presbyterian Church, Mount Washington Presbyterian Church, and in Brooklyn the Flatbush Congregational Church and Kings Highway Methodist Episcopal Church. This is by no means a complete list of churches that are today successfully reaching the young people of their neighborhoods. One minister regularly asks parents and children to sit together in the family pew. In this particular church the last Sunday of each month is known as "Family Pew Sunday."

A Children's Church.

The Rev. Robert R. White of Hunts Point Presbyterian Church says that for many years he has made this matter of children's attendance one of his major objectives, and has met with gratifying results. He reports that not only do a large group of children attend each Sunday morning service, but that many of them sit with their parents in the family pew—that family pew which the skeptical assert no longer exists. A similar report comes from the pastor of the Church of the Resurrection at 115 East Seventy-fourth Street, often called the Young People's Church. Here the purpose of gathering in the young person has been a special feature of the church's work.

A regular children's church has been evolved by one minister, not to exclude but rather include the adult. The children know the service by heart; they can lead the service without hesitation or mistake. In this church it is the parent who is needed as a regular attendant far more than the children.

Dr. Bloodgood of the Hackensack Reformed Church, Rochelle Park, N. J., speaking of his work with children, said that the passing of the family pew did not, in his opinion, always mean the end of the presence of young members in Sunday morning congregations. In Dr. Bloodgood's church, for instance, where there are few family pews, the majority of those attending Sabbath services are young people. Each Sunday there are two sermons, the first for juniors, the second, immediately following, for adults.

At both services the music is provided by a junior choir of fourteen girls between ten and twelve years of age. Pastors of other churches have set their minds to this problem, and are meeting in some cases with enthusiastic response.

Older folks who remember weekly journeys to the village church during adolescent years believe churchgoing is a habit, and a good one; but it is a habit easiest formed when young. That is the reason thinking men of today view with alarm the depleted ranks of young recruits in the church congregations. What will be the result if children do not attend church? It is not yet too late to save the situation, but it is necessary that suggestions be made as to what can be done, how it should be done, when, and by whom, if an adequate remedy is to be found for what is now considered a matter of vital importance.

CROWDED DEPARTMENT STORES CORRAL MANY LOST CHILDREN

Christmas Shopping Brings Its Daily Round-Up Of Little Strays in the Big Establishments

THE Winter season for lost children is in full swing, the preserves being the holiday-thronged department stores. Numerous are the signs to the salesperson that Christmas is at hand, but none of them is more unmistakable than the seasonal increase in the number of small, puckered faces and the plaint: "I can't find my mother." The sequel is a weary, harassed-looking shopper, inquiring with increasing nervousness: "Have you seen a little boy or girl of such and such size, dressed thus and so?"

The girls on the balcony overlooking the main floor of one of the city's great shopping emporiums say that they can scarcely attend to their work these days on account of the numerous prodigal-son-and-daughter dramas enacted before their eyes. When the scion of a family whose Christmas shopping is that moment at its highest pitch wanders away from the parental skirt to examine some attraction to childish fancy, a saleswoman or a floorwalker is usually quick to spot him.

As a "lost child," his proper place thereafter, until he regains his mother's hand, is the balcony. Naturally, he is not always willing to go with the "nice lady." The main floor has too many sights. But if he is tired out to the crying stage, he is easily led, ostensibly in search of mother. Once on the balcony his tears are dried. All is novel and interesting there and bright eyes are too much engrossed in watching the tops of swarming heads to cry. And some of the lost ones are by no means happy to be found when inquiring parents locate them there.

The family reunions that the balcony witnesses are of many kinds. Sometimes there are tears and kisses of relief, again there are scoldings and anger. The other day a happy little boy of 5 was kicking his heels on the balcony waiting to be claimed when a woman's voice was heard on the floor below calling loudly for "Harry."

"That's me—that's my mother!" The little boy sighed, as if this were the end of a perfect hour. The child was straightway restored to his parent, but Harry was not overjoyed, since the reunion was sealed with a spanking.

Another department store has largely solved the lost-child question for itself by running its own day nursery, where shoppers may check their children for an hour or so in charge of a motherly nurse. Just now the place is crowded to capacity. Its little white cribs are always taken, its floor space is full and its toys are in steady demand. But even the nursery does not settle all the store's child problems. There are mothers who leave their babies in carriages outside or take them on the shopping tour and temporarily forget them, and so the store detective still has a few frantic women on his hands.

Besides, the nursery sometimes creates problems of its own. Not long ago a woman came in about the middle of the afternoon to take her baby home. She had lost her check, she explained, but could identify her baby, so everything would be all right. Not so, replied the nurse, no babies were surrendered without the check. How could she tell that the woman was claiming her own and suppose some other customer were to return later and find her baby gone? The woman was distracted. What could she do? She must have her baby. The only thing to do, the nurse explained, was for her to come back when the store was closing and take what baby was left.

When she returned, only one child was there—a little black baby.

CHICAGO NOISE NOW REGISTERED

CHICAGO is now attempting to prove by means of a newly perfected accoustometer that the Western metropolis is the noisiest city in the world. Trial readings were taken at different places in the Loop in a series of tests that the City Board of Health is conducting to eliminate some of the noises that bother pedestrians and workers.

The racket in the wheat pit during a frenzied period of selling was found to be almost equal in volume to that created by the elevated at Wells and Madison Streets. The noise on the street level is about three times as intense as on top of one of Chicago's skyscrapers. The number of sound units equaling the human voice is 60. At Wells and Madison Streets the clamor reaches 657.

A comparison between the amount of noise created by a steam locomotive and an electric locomotive pulling freight trains of equal length showed the electric engine to be but one-third as noisy as the steam.

TO SCHOOL ON SKIS

Ski-running is becoming popular with school children of the mountain districts of Bohemia. Formerly children were often obliged to stay at home on snowy days; now, on skis, they can cover the ground easily.

WHETHER SPATS ARE IN OR OUT STIRS UP A SARTORIAL DEBATE

Despite London's Advice, New York Approves Them, White, of Course, Excepted

WHETHER spats have gone out of fashion is the question that is just now causing agitation in the sartorial realm. Debate has been stirred anew by a cable from London, taken from a journal of men's fashions, that the spat is doomed. Haberdashers assert that there must be some mistake: Are they not giving space to spats in all their show windows?

"Spats, spats?" they ask. "We have never sold so many spats in any season. Perhaps you mean white spats? That kind of spat is out, to be sure, but fawn spats and weathered stone spats and brown spats are quite in style. When it is said that at the King's garden party some Australian diplomat and a lot of Americans scrapped their spats and left them under the hedges, one must remember that spats are worn in inclement weather, usually, and of course would not be exactly in the mode for such an occasion. A white spat is as much out of place at present as a white elephant, for as spats are made to receive splashes of mud, if any, it would not be in good taste to have them in colors which would show the slightest soil."

To take the field against spats is to assail an old and respected institution. Nobody can tell who put on the first spat, but spats, or at least certain ancestors of the spat, were worn several thousand years ago at the ancient city of Persepolis. That place was destroyed by Alexander the Great, whose rude soldiery may have disapproved of the dandified dress of the inhabitants. These spats were strips of leather, attached to the sandals so as to form a kind of protection for the ankle.

Problem of Low Shoes.

The original shoe was more like an Oxford tie than the high boots or laced shoes of today. As more low cut shoes are worn by men than ever before, it is asserted by some authorities that the spat can never pass away as an article of polite wear. Formerly, to shield the stockinged feet from chill, a cloth shield buttoned at the side and kept from riding up by means of a strap passing under the arch of the foot was employed in many European countries. These were also called gaiters or spatterdashes.

Fashion has decreed these gaiters for several centuries as a mark of real style. Masters of elegance in the Georgian era, such as Beau Brummel, pinned their faith to gaiters and to spats, believing they gave just the right finish and added a certain filip of fashion which could be obtained in no other way. It was considered so admirable—this spat—that clever shoemakers began to make it more convenient by building the spat and shoe in one piece. The upper of a buttoned shoe, especially if it be made of cloth, is a glorified gaiter or spat. It is a strapless spat, which needs no underpinnings and no moorings. Therefore, to this day, shoes with cloth tops are still hailed as gaiters. That abomination of years ago, the Congress gaiter, was a degenerate spat which had a tuck of rubber fabric in it, which made it close snugly and warmly upon the ankles of the wearer.

Although buttoned shoes once were considered as an improvement on spats, there is a tendency nowadays to regard them as having less distinction. The low shoes still worn cry aloud for the solace of spats, according to the dealers up and down Fifth Avenue, who, therefore, show them, and that in a variety of shades. For afternoon wear the grays and fawns are considered quite desirable, while a dark Oxford gray may be worn for evening with patent leather shoes or dancing pumps. When a person accoutred in Oxford gray spats arrives at a scene of gayety, he is supposed to park his spats in a convenient space and enter with his feet in light formal attire. There being no hedge under which to throw them, that is perhaps the best he can do.

There is character, too, in the method of wearing spats—a proper time and a proper spat place, according to experts. Not long ago a stout and pompous gentleman entered a leading bank, seeking to arrange with the president for a loan. He was so sure in his method, so handy with his gloves and so skilful with his hat, that the official was very much impressed. There is no indication of what might have happened had not that banker looked down and made a discovery. The result of that chance look of exploration was that he refused to make the loan, and the reason for the refusal was spats. Here was an apparently substantial citizen applying for a loan, and yet, in August, wearing spats! The financier reasoned that as spats were intended more for use than for ornament, however ornamental they might be, that anybody who wore them in hot weather was essentially a fraud. He acted on that assumption and was glad later that he had done so.

The general verdict seems to be that spats are no longer necessarily the mark of the dandy, but that in certain conditions and under stress of weather they may be entirely permissible. They may even give the well-groomed effect which goes with the best tailored clothes. In this country at least, although they may not be seen on the feet of all, the spat has hardly been relegated to the yesteryears. Spats are still worn when an extra note of sartorial grace is required.

SCHOOL OF TODAY IS NOT LIKE THAT OF YEAR 1890

Revolution in Educational Methods as Pronounced as That In Industry or Medicine—Primarily Children Learn Now by Doing Things

THE developments in modern education during the past year are reviewed in the following article, which will appear in a more extended form in the 1927 edition of "The American Year Book." This advance publication is made by arrangement with the publishers—the Macmillan Company—and the editor, Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart. The author of the article is the Superintendent of Schools of Cleveland, Ohio.

By DR. ROBINSON G. JONES.

EDUCATORS whose careers were ended a quarter of a century or more ago and whose names are found now only in musty reports and graven on tombs may be looking down with amazement from that heaven to which good teachers go upon the modern school of the Americas of 1926. Well they may look with amazement, for the public school of today differs as much from that of 1890 in communication, transportation, industry and surgery, as carried on today, differ from their typical manifestations and practices of twenty-five or thirty years ago. This is to say that education, too, has felt the quickening influence of the scientific spirit.

Education methods then consisted of doing the same thing in the same way. Children were supposed to sit quietly in schoolrooms and absorb a prescribed mass of facts. Initiative on the part of boys and girls which went beyond the prescribed mass was likely to prove uncomfortable to teacher and pupil alike; consequently it was not encouraged. The outstanding procedure of the schoolroom was that of question and answer. In too many instances (and this is true enough today) the teacher was regarded as the most important person in the room. Form was sacred.

But since education came under the influence of the scientific spirit we have seen some striking tendencies changing the whole character of public education—tendencies leading from dependence to initiative, from question and answer to laboratory and experiment, from the teacher to the child, from form to spirit. This process has been marked, as the urbanization of America has continued, by shifting more and more responsibility from the home to the school. Psychology, in this period of a quarter century, has made the old school as antiquated and out of place in enlightened communities as a horse and carriage on Fifth Avenue.

Present Objectives.

To obtain an idea of what leading educators are thinking today about the objectives and methods of education, let us look at a few sentences from a recent monograph from the University of Chicago Press, "Curriculum Investigation," by Franklin Bobbitt and others:

Civilization is a system of activities.

Whether savage or civilized, man is concerned with matters of food, shelter, physical protection, decoration, travel, communication, social adjustment, social control, play, work, family life, religion and the like.

Civilization has been a process of inventing and using improved, and usually enlarged, methods of carrying on the activities of life.

Matters are not different today, except that at present one's vision of the world of reality must be immeasurably wider in order to deal with the more complicated situations, appliances and processes. • • •

The business of education today is to teach the growing individuals, so far as their original natures will permit, to perform efficiently those activities which constitute the latest and highest level of civilization.

There are many levels of natural ability, however. At the bottom are those so low that the individuals cannot advance more than one-tenth of the way up the scale of civilization's performance. They can advance to a level high for them. • • •

Education's task is to find those persons among this low-ability group who come nearest to living life as this group can be expected to live it. They exhibit the patterns of conduct—high for them—which can, with the necessary variations, be the objectives for all in this group. • • •

In the same way, each ability group is to perform the processes that are high for that group. • • •

We can thus think of the levels of civilization as a spiral, the weakest group achieving at its best only the lowest turn, the next group achieving the second level, and so on up to the strongest group, which attains the highest level.

They Learn by Doing.

During the past year the tendency to utilize activities has been pronounced, more pronounced, probably, than any other trend in the field of public education. In history, civics, geography, language, hygiene, nature study, spelling, reading, indeed, in nearly every subject of the curriculum from kindergarten through high school, children are learning by doing things. In this process there is involved, of course, considerable studying about things, but the doing is primary.

Learning to read, for example, is in some schools very much an activity. There are pictures to be cut out, painted and pasted and identifying words to be associated with them. Ingenious devices are utilized to cause the child to associate the word hat or cat with the picture of the hat or cat he cuts out and pastes. Such processes are far more interesting to the child than the ancient routine of memorizing letters; also, they are far more effective, for they are enabling children to learn to read better and in less time.

Frequently the utilization of activities in the course of study involves several subjects that in the old curriculum were water-tight in their isolation. Children who are learning to read may take a journey through the park, where they observe trees, flowers, birds and the animals in the zoo. Next day in the schoolroom they tell what they have seen. The short, simple sentences of the children themselves are printed on the blackboard. Perhaps charts or posters are made for which the children may cut out and color pictures of trees, birds, animals. Thus the children may make their own reader, basing it on their own experiences, recorded in their own words. They find the process fascinating and delightful.

This utilization of activities, so often associated with the project method, is not new. • • • It is not new, but only in recent years have the educational philosophers and pattern-makers built it into general practice.

Courses in Activities.

Ample evidence of the widespread acceptance of this practice in America is found in courses of study recently issued by school systems in progressive States and communities from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In these we see topical outlines and logical arrangements giving way to the setting forth of programs of possible activities by pupils, together with explanatory records of actual schoolroom happenings, arranged in psychological order.

We are witnessing, too, the incorporation in the curriculum of many of the extracurricular activities, such as the writing and publishing of the school magazine or newspaper, public speaking, dramatics and others. This process affords further testimony of the educational worth of activities.

As children in modern schools become older they are encouraged to accept more and more responsibility for school and civic enterprises. In the junior and senior high schools of America we are finding, therefore, an amazing amount of student self-government through student councils, honor study halls and similar undertakings. The formal study of civics, as it existed in the past, does not begin to compare in effectiveness with these activities which involve self-control, courage, honesty, loyalty and a sense of responsibility. As that formal study was dull and lifeless, so these activities are interesting and vital.

Formation of Health Habits.

And if the formation of desirable habits is important in attacking the problems of reading, geography, spelling and character growth, it is equally important in health education. Here again the start is made in the kindergarten and the effort is carried throughout the pupil's public school career. Habits of diet, of cleanliness, of care of body, of rest, of relaxation—all are formed to correct or prevent disease, to culminate in a correlation of acts and attitudes that surely and certainly are bound to increase by a vast amount the sum total of human happiness by insuring good health and long life and by eliminating the suffering, despair and great economic loss due to disease. This one phase of education alone is of economic consequence so vast as to justify a most generous portion of American public school expenditures.

All of these activity methods are quite in keeping with the principle, developed by modern psychologists, that there is no assurance a pupil has mastered an ability useful in life unless it is developed as nearly as possible in the way it is to be used. This, of course, requires a maximum experience with realities. In the case of self-government as a project in moral guidance we have a very real situation in the school itself. In the case of various subjects in the curriculum this principle lays greater stress on the place of materials in the school program. It requires that a good school be well stocked with material out of the home, the laboratory, the market place, the highway, the country, the field and the factory. If a school is close to good museums whose resources are available to the children, so much the better. Museums in America rapidly are coming to see that education is their main function.

Work with materials is absorbingly interesting to children. It affords them opportunity for expression of all the senses, for manipulation, for companionship and for play of curiosity.

We are finding that pupils who handle materials, who work out projects involving excursions to various places, involving reading, experimentation and research, are far more likely to be alert, interested and active than those who study by the traditional fact-cramming method. And is there no old-fashioned, hard study in the American school of 1926? Bless your heart, there is vastly more of it, more purposeful and eager than the old school dreamed of. • • •

All this and much more is but part of the spirit of scientific research which from the day of Francis Bacon has been creating a new world. The traditional practice of medicine came under the influence of this spirit 100 years ago, and vanished—to be succeeded by modern medicine and surgery. We have seen its influence in transportation and industry. And now, in this last twenty-five years, educational processes are being made over or eliminated entirely in favor of new ones far more effective.

Our schools are like a great army on the march. The pupils are the soldiers; the teachers and administrators are the officers, and the educational research workers, using the methods of applied science in developing better curricula and pupil guidance, represent the engineering and medical services. These research workers are exploring the terrain, choosing and improving roads so that the army may reach its objectives promptly and in good order.

ARKANSAS TO HAVE PYRAMID FOR FUTURE ARCHAEOLOGISTS

"Coin" Harvey Is Building Monument to Tell Story of Present Civilization to Distant Ages

NEAR Gravette, Ark., Colonel W. H. (Coin) Harvey, who gained prominence in free silver controversies with his book, "Coin's Financial Guide," has made a dream bear fruit. The dream is of an immense pyramid on his Monte Ne property to tell the "next civilization" the general state of affairs of the present era.

When the pyramid was well under way, Colonel Harvey became the victim of blood poisoning. For weeks he lay at the point of death. He is now reading letters addressed to his "administrator," professing keen interest in the pyramid.

His conception of a pyramid to transmit to posterity the story of our civilization met with wide response, and many persons united with him in erecting this "marker" of the twentieth century. With the help of these friends Colonel Harvey laid the foundation, the excavation for which reaches down 1,100 feet to solid rock. On this foundation will arise a base 20 feet high, 40 feet square at the bottom.

The pyramid will have a height of 180 feet. Upon the base will rest a 35-foot shaft which will be 32 feet square. On top of this shaft, graduating from 22 to 6 feet square, will rise another shaft 80 feet high.

Data on the present age will be preserved in a 16-foot square room, with walls 8 feet thick. In the shaft will be also two vaults in which information will be placed.

The cost will be about $50,000, part of which has been subscribed by persons in thirty States and in countries outside America. Harvey has personally contributed $4,000 to date and his will provides for the completion of the shaft should he not finish it in his lifetime.

There is a plan to write a book containing the necessary record for posterity to ponder. Three copies will be hermetically sealed in glass containers and placed in the vaults.

And for Christmas
Bienvenue à Québec

THE WEEK of weeks at Old Quebec is Christmas week . . . The days hum with sport. Snow-shoe expeditions tracking to hospitable club-cabins. Sleighing parties jingling over to Chateau Richer. Dog-teams loping back and forth. Ski 'experts' trying ski-joring and dizzy leaps. Not-so-experts practicing with instructors . . . The nights glow with life. Merry tobogganers shooting the illuminated slide. Graceful skaters whirling on the Chateau rink. Jolly companions lounging by the Chateau's crackling fireplaces . . . Six days of this glowing, gripping sport. Six nights of these romantic, poetic thrills. Climaxing in the New Year's Eve Bal Masqué.

All this—while living in bath-roomed luxury, surrounded by Canadian Pacific service, and castled in halls baronial. Bookings indicate large parties from New York and Boston. Immediate reservations are suggested.

SCHOOLS FOCUS RELIGIOUS ISSUE

Question of Instruction Based on the Bible Has Assumed Importance in Many States— Court Test in New York

HOW and when religious instruction is to be given to school children has rapidly become a question of national importance in the United States. Shall it be part of the school curriculum or not, and, if not, shall it be given to pupils outside school confines but during time allotted to the regular study period?

California was the first State to advocate the dismissal of children from school earlier than usual, on a given day once a week, to enable them to attend religious classes on school time. Though its own Legislature failed to adopt this measure, the idea was taken up by other States and is now an established fact in many of them.

These "school time release" laws represent a new type of legislation to get around the difficulties arising from constitutional injunctions against the teaching of religion in public schools.

New York State is now testing the constitutionality of such a law, which had been in operation in White Plains. To test the legality of this "school time release" practice, the Freethinkers' Society of that city last Winter applied for a writ of mandamus to compel State Commissioner of Education Graves to put an end to the system. Justice Ellis J. Staley sustained at Albany the Board of Education of White Plains and denied the application of the society, which, however, continued the fight before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and it is expected that the case will eventually reach the United States Supreme Court.

Arguments For and Against.

Advocates of the system contend that it does not interfere in any way with individual or religious freedom, since it leaves choice of religion and place of instruction with those concerned. Opponents argue that it links Church and State, for it makes religious organizations a part of the public school system inasmuch as they are permitted to give instruction to children on school time and with school credit.

But, back of much of the legislation regarding religious instruction looms the Bible, and those actively interested in the matter may be roughly divided into three groups: First, those who accept the Holy Scriptures as irrefutable and final authority on the origin and development of man and other species of life and are opposed to the "theory of evolution." Second, those who strive to put the Bible in the public schools as a subject of instruction. Third, those who desire to prevent their children from falling under the influence of religious teaching contrary to their own faith and hence demand time set apart for special instruction of the kind.

Compulsory school Bible-reading laws are now in effect in eleven States. In Ohio a law providing for the use of the Bible in the public schools was passed by both houses, but the Governor vetoed it. Delaware has a law prescribing the reading of the Bible "without comment," in public schools and colleges. It was passed in 1923, and has since been amended to provide for the fining and dismissing from service of any teacher who fails to comply with the act. Efforts are being made to obtain a test of the constitutionality of the law. A committee made up of representatives of various denominations and assisted by the American Civil Liberties Union is engaged in this task. The Trenton (N. J.) Board of Education has declared itself in favor of religious instruction in the schools and decided to make it a part of the curriculum.

California Bill Defeated.

A State measure to include the Bible either as a subject to be studied in public schools or as a reference book in the school libraries was defeated in the recent election in California. A similar bill introduced three years ago in the Legislature was rejected. This year the measure was submitted to the vote of the people in the form of a constitutional amendment.

The progress of anti-evolution legislation does not appear to have been as rapid as its proponents may have wished. In the campaign for the enactment of such laws during the last few months only one success has been achieved. On the other hand, there have been three failures registered.

ALL SIAM HONORS A WHITE ELEPHANT

Sacred Beast Found in the Jungle Is Escorted to The Palace of the King With Great Ceremony—A Rare Animal

ANOTHER white elephant has been born in North Siam and brought south to Chang Mai for inspection by the authorities. It entered the city attended by a great procession of other elephants which, though similar in kind, were far beneath it in rank. The sacred beast, according to cabled dispatches, was received by priests at the gates with that traditional reverence which these rare patricians of the jungle have been accorded for countless centuries. Afterward it was garlanded by the Chao Luang and precious lustral water was poured upon its venerated head in the presence of a great gathering of persons of all nationalities. It then continued its stately journey to the palace of the King.

The veneration with which the Siamese regard their white elephants is founded on an old superstition. Like many of the peoples of the East, they believe that the departed souls of men return to inhabit the bodies of animals. The ancient Egyptians and the natives of modern India have had similar conceptions of immortality, leading them to hold certain animals sacred. And in Siam the white elephant is most sacred of all because in it are believed to dwell the spirits of kings and heroes of long ago.

The extreme rarity of the white variety coincides nicely with the superstition. Siam is a land of elephants. They are used for hunting and for travel, as well as for doing the heavy draft labor which Western races assign to the truck and the traveling crane. Once upon a time the van of the Siamese Army was composed of a formidable squadron of elephants of war, recalling Hannibal's expeditionary force in Gaul. The King had a herd of 20,000.

Time has somewhat tarnished the procedure which was gone through before the white elephant reached the royal stables in the old days. It is sad to record that the last one captured, though fêted with proper magnificence at the beginning and ending of his travels, made the actual journey from Ayutha to Bangkok in a reinforced freight car of a blatantly materialistic design, and was lodged in a stable vulgarly illuminated with several practical electric lights.

They ordered these matters better in the past. Immediately upon his capture the white elephant began to receive the adulation befitting his position. To whatever part of the jungle he was temporarily detained in nobles and mandarin were at once sent that he might be properly cared for.

Some preliminary training was necessary in the amenities of his new position, that he might learn the manners of courtly elephants. Since his skin was his fortune, this was carefully washed, that the priceless pallor might show to full advantage. Only the best unguents were used in this operation, of course, and for the rest of his life he was to receive this daily massage.

Then, along specially cut roads through the jungle he was led triumphantly to the banks of the river, and the honors he received in this passage from the rural population were continued with increasing magnificence as he approached the urban localities. At Ayuthia, the old capital of Siam, a royal barge was waiting to carry him down the Menam River to Bangkok. It was a floating palace of teakwood, hung with crimson curtains and carpeted with gilded matting.

But the most munificent ceremony was yet to come. He was met at Bangkok by an even more imposing committee of notables, who came to confer the name the King had chosen for him. This was inscribed on a particularly succulent piece of sugarcane, and after the priests had baptized him in the presence of the King, he very obviously accepted the chosen name by swallowing it.

It is this financial aspect that gave point to the expression, "to have a white elephant on your hands." When the King presented one of the royal white elephants to a noble, it was taken to mean that he desired to ruin him, since no ordinary exchequer could stand the expense which a white elephant required for its proper upkeep, and since the beast was apt to live two or three centuries, there was no hope of surcease from the magnificent burden.

FRENCH BUSINESS QUARTER RISES IN MADISON AVENUE

Groceries Give Way to Epiceries as Part of the Old Thoroughfare Becomes Parisianized

A NEW French quarter is in process of formation in New York—this time in Madison Avenue, scene of so many social and architectural changes. Commerce has transformed the stately residential street of bygone days; and it is particularly as merchants that the French are now establishing themselves in this neighborhood.

Every morning smart little shops with French names over the entrance open their doors for business. The windows, displaying unmistakably the Gallic genius of arrangement, are filled with dainty and tempting things. Passengers, traveling in luxurious limousines or in street cars find delight in gazing out at the display. Shops called "Maison This" and "Maison That" attract the eye. Where once plain American grocery stores flourished are now to be seen exotic "épiceries." Antique shops abound, offering an amazing variety of objects indispensable to the present mode of interior decoration.

Building alterations are often so rapid that it is impossible for even a native of the district to keep up with them. A resident of the avenue relates:

"As recently as 10 o'clock yesterday morning there was a little shop at —— that made a specialty of certain delicacies for the table. Shortly before noon today I went to the shop to get my favorite brand of cocoa and found a Chinaman hanging out a laundry sign. I asked him what had become of the 'épiceris' of yesterday and was informed in pidgeon English that it had moved to more commodious quarters in the next block."

The French appear to be getting a firm foothold. But the new movement is not confined to business. A little way east is Central Park, and there one finds Parisians, old and young, at play. While Frenchmen with black berets promenade the Avenue, discussing the events of the day in their vivacious fashion, French mothers and nurses flock to the park—just as if it were, instead, the Luxembourg Gardens in Paris. Despite the temperature freezing their fingers, attentively sewing and knitting, and chatting while the children romp. The French are out-of-door people, and the natural hardihood of the race persists in this more rigorous climate.

A real flavor of Paris, a real touch of the Latin Quarter, is blending with the conglomerate picture of New York life. Not far away from Madison Avenue, at the present moment, a celebrated French actress from the Comédie Française is delighting expatriots with romantic and classic répertoire in her native tongue. Those who prefer the lyric touch may find equally at home in a famous Opéra Comique.

Like no other car of its class, Chevrolet combines ease of operation with those qualities that women instinctively demand in an automobile.

It is easy to start, steer and stop. It is simple and safe to handle under all conditions. And, best of all, it offers the inimitable smartness, elegance and luxury of bodies by Fisher on all closed models.

Just bring her in and let her see for herself how well Chevrolet meets her ideals of fine quality.

QUALITY AT LOW COST

More Value than the Price Suggests

In the year just drawing to a close the price of Dodge Brothers Motor Cars was materially lowered.

Yet during this period more important improvements were incorporated than in any year in Dodge Brothers history. Advances were made in engineering and body designs. The cars possess a greater degree of smoothness, silence and ease. They are more comfortable, more beautiful.

Current prices—made possible, of course, by constantly mounting sales—are therefore not an obvious measure of value. Prices, in fact, have never told the full story of Dodge Brothers dependability and basic worth.

But now, more than ever before, there is far more value than the price suggests

STONEWALL JACKSON MUSEUM BEGUN NEAR FREDERICKSBURG

Room Where He Died of Accidental Wounds Restored to Civil War Period Aspect

[illegible] who have traveled southward by rail from Washington may have heard near Fredericksburg, Va., the customary announcement: "Yonder, ladies and gentlemen, you see the spot where General 'Stonewall' Jackson died on May 10, 1863." And a little white farmhouse on a mound green knoll would flash by.

Formerly visitors to the house would have gained little more of interest from it than he who sped past. But lately the small frame structure, known as Fairy Field, began to evolve into a Thomas Jonathan (Stonewall) Jackson museum. By virtue of newly assembled collections, the edifice now may correctly reconstruct the death scene. Curtains, rag rugs, mullions, kerosene lamps and other furniture of his day have rehabilitated the room in which General Jackson breathed his last, giving it as nearly as possible the appearance it had on that dire day for the Confederacy sixty-three years ago.

A little 11-year-old girl at the farmhouse watched them bring into her home the General who had been unfortunately wounded by his own men; afterward she watched his funeral procession take the body away. Now, as Mrs. Charles K. Pendleton, she holds a group of Southern women to the task of converting the former doctor's office of her brother into a memorial to him whom James Ford Rhodes, the historian, has characterized as "the most striking figure of the war on the Southern side."

A Flanking Surprise.

General Hooker, Lincoln's choice, had taken command of the Army of the Potomac and occupied Chancellorsville; but presently he ordered his men to fall back somewhat into The Wilderness. His position there as strong; he knew it and so did General Lee. The Southern commander concluded that a direct attack upon Hooker's Union forces would be poor generalship, and so General Lee and General Jackson took counsel and made other plans.

Hooker, on his part, considered his position altogether safe. Therefore, on the morning of May 2, 1863, when General Jackson's troops were discovered to be on the march, he inferred that they were retiring before the superior force. Some among his subordinates knowing Lee and Jackson better argued that the columns were swinging around for a flank attack. But Hooker was not convinced. He ordered no preparations for battle.

Late that afternoon the Eleventh Corps of the Army of the Potomac was taking things easily; some soldiers were getting supper ready, some were eating, some were playing cards—when they were disturbed by a rush of deer and rabbits routed from their lairs in the forest. Before the men understood what had happened, Jackson's infantry, "as tough, hardy and full of spirits as they were ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-looking," were upon them.

The Southern General, after a fifteen-mile march, having reached his destination west of the Union Army on the side directly opposite Lee's position, had lost no time in making his attack. And after a brief resistance the Eleventh Corps, surprised and outnumbered, broke and ran.

His Dying Order.

Jackson then turned his attention to reforming his troops, who had fallen into confusion from the charge through the tangled undergrowth. For this purpose and at the same time to discover Hooker's intentions, he proceeded with his escort far beyond his own line of battle until, encountering Union fire, he turned back. Night had fallen by this time and identification was impossible.

The Confederates, seeing men riding their way from the Union territory, took them for an enemy group and fired. They quickly discovered their mistake, but it was too late. Their leader, General Jackson, was mortally hurt. The nearest house was Fairy Field, home of Thomas Coleman Chandler, and there the wounded General was taken. Next day while their leader was suffering in the farmhouse his men in the field carried the battle on to complete victory with the war cry, "Remember Jackson!" Pneumonia set in, and eight days after his victory at Chancellorsville, Jackson, in the words of his dying order, "passed over the river to rest in the shade of the trees."

ITALY IS LATEST COUNTRY TO PUT TAX ON BACHELORS

A Few Others Have Tried It—In America There Is a Shortage of Spinsters

ONLY absolute dictators, puissant kings aided by popular emotions, or Governments eager to stimulate birth-rates or make good losses by emigration have succeeded in taxing bachelors. Mussolini accomplished it by decree in Italy the other day as a means of meeting budget needs for the support of indigent women and children.

Pangalos in Greece decreed an impost of $12 yearly on celibates over 40, and $24 yearly on those between 24 and 40 for the same reason that he laid a high duty on silk stockings—to increase industry and discourage extravagance. Ireland and Bulgaria lately passed similar measures to offset migration and replenish the race. Saxony charges travelers 25 per cent. extra if they are unmarried. Esthonia's re-established nation submitted to a head tax on bachelors to lessen the burden on the family man. Where divorce is difficult, the tax on singleness meets less resistance.

France, despite fiscal and racial deficits, has been unable to get the Chamber of Deputies to restrict the incomes of celibates to $20,000 a year. Britain's Labor Government was dissuaded from taxing bachelorship by a Chancellor of the Exchequer, himself unattached, by the plea that they were failures and Labor's theory should be to exact tribute from success. Once England had a tax on bachelors—ranging from £40 for dukes to 6 shillings for laborers—but that came in the emotional period following the Restoration, and as late as 1785 there was a levy on bachelor servants. The academic objection to taxing a special category of the population has been that it was excess taxation, since it is an extra impost upon those subject to all general taxes.

In the United States several Commonwealths have vainly sought to penalize bachelors. One Floridan sent his check in advance to the Legislature, explaining that "no free man would object to paying even $500 a year" for his liberty, but elsewhere, even in States where women outnumber men, that point of view lacked sufficient adherents. In the country as a whole the number of single white males exceeds the number of single white females by more than 3,000,000, therefore pressure to make all bachelors take wives would eventually disclose itself as impossible of realization.

SOIL PHOTOGRAPHY

COLOR photography is now being successfully used in the field investigation of soil types. Photographs have been taken by the Bureau of Soils of the United States Department of Agriculture, and the various colors, mottlings and streaks show distinctly on the plates, permitting identification and study.

RAPPROCHEMENT GAINS IN FRANCE AND GERMANY

Many Signs of Reconciliation Appear in Addition to Diplomatic and Commercial Accords—Critics of Briand's Thoiry Policy Are Still Heard in Paris

By HAROLD CALLENDER.

PARIS.

AT a luncheon table laid for two in Geneva not long ago there was a meeting which, though it passed almost unnoticed, was in its way as memorable and impressive as that at Thoiry, when the Foreign Ministers of France and Germany ate trout together and sketched a tentative scheme for the complete political reconciliation of their two countries. For at Geneva a prolonged visit took place (a Continental luncheon being no hasty affair) between Henri Chatenet, President of the French Union of War Veterans, and Dr. Rossmann, President of the German war veterans.

Thus, in the persons of their official leaders, the French and German soldiers of the great war have at last formally shaken hands almost exactly eight years after the firing ceased between the Vosges and the English Channel. One had often wondered precisely at what date these former enemies would feel that it was entirely proper to resume relations on a basis more extensive than the political and economic. But if European etiquette appears a bit meticulous in these matters, it is perhaps pertinent to recall that a marked coolness between North and South persisted for something like thirty years after our Civil War, and that it was more than four decades before the soldiers of the Confederacy and the Union met in joint reunion.

This stage has not yet been reached here. What did not happen at Geneva is probably as suggestive for the interpretation of Franco-German relations as what did happen. At this international meeting of war veterans it was proposed that the French and German delegations should hold a banquet together, but the French group voted almost unanimously against it. So M. Chatenet and Dr. Rossmann lunched together instead, and discussed means of supplementing the conciliatory work of M. Briand and Herr Stresemann.

Briand's Statement to the Germans.

"Our nations need give no further proof of their strength or heroism," said M. Briand, addressing the German delegation in the League of Nations. "Both have shown their prowess on the battlefield, and both have reaped an ample harvest of military glory. Henceforth they may seek laurels in other fields." French and German veterans may meet as individuals, as soldiers respecting one another, and many doubtless are ready to support heartily the Locarno Treaty and the principle of the Thoiry conversation. But the day when they may feel disposed to assemble in a sort of collective comradeship upon the battlefield of the Marne, as the veterans of the Blue and the Gray gathered at Gettysburg, has not yet arrived.

This incident at Geneva may be taken as indicative of the advance, and of the difficulties, of a genuine rapprochement between France and Germany—a reconciliation that would be moral and emotional as well as diplomatic and commercial. That such a rapprochement is under way, no close observer of recent events in Europe can doubt. And the year 1926 may perhaps be regarded as the period in which it began to gather perceptible momentum.

Just as "fraternization" during the war was forbidden by army orders, a friendly attitude between French and Germans has been officially encouraged during the last year. If general headquarters set the style, so to speak, when the fighting was on, it is the Quai d'Orsay and the Wilhelmstrasse that set it today. Not everybody conformed in the trenches, and there are dissenters now as well; but the change in the mode nevertheless counts for a good deal.

Whatever share of the credit one may assign to M. Briand and Herr Stresemann, the gradual resumption of relations—intellectual, professional and social—between the French and the Germans has been one of the most notable and interesting events of these recent months.

The evidences of it are of great variety. An association of French throat specialists, after a long debate, recently decided that the time had come for reviving their affiliations with German specialists in the same field, broken off in 1914. A group of French municipal councilors, after a protracted visit of observation of German city government, returned to express nothing but gratitude for the cordial reception they received everywhere, adding a few remarks in the Thoiry spirit. Several French journalists who crossed the Rhine to examine the state of mind of the country obtained similar impressions. German football teams and boxers have contested with French athletes in Paris, and there has never been the slightest suggestion that anything but a thoroughly sportsmanlike mood prevailed on either side.

The Whole Question Explored.

A recent discussion as to whether it was opportune to revive the pre-war custom of awarding the Legion of Honor to distinguished German scholars resulted in an amusing exploration of the entire question of Franco-German relations, which in this sphere is, of course, largely an emotional one. A member of the Cabinet was quoted as saying: "We and the Germans cannot go on glaring at each other like porcelain dogs. In two years, ten years, twenty years, shall we still refuse to give the cross to Germans, while we continue to decorate men of other nationalities? Is it a question of date? Then who is to fix the date?" Opposed to this view were some who argued that President von Hindenburg encouraged the Black Reichswehr, that Germany had not kept its engagements, and that every French soldier should be made a member of the Legion before any German was thus honored.

There is scarcely any doubt as to which side of this argument will prevail, for the contacts between French and German scholars have been reestablished with a rapidity excelled only by that of the cooperation of business men of the two nations. In a recent magazine article Professor Langevin discussed the progress of science since the war, the prospect of another and more chemical war and the question as to whether young chemists would take part willingly in such a conflict.

"I can affirm," he said, "that none of those whom I meet have any war-like ideas. The prospect of forming a staff of military chemists does not interest them, their work being directed in quite different channels. And in Germany I think the state of mind of the new generation of scientists is the same as it is in France." One has only to converse with university professors and other scholars to discover that they are intent upon better laboratories and better teaching methods—that is, upon repairing the damage the war did to science—and upon collaborating with Germans as well as other foreigners, rather than upon perpetuating the bitterness of the late war or preparing hopefully for another.

In the field of the arts the tendency is markedly the same. Tristan Bernard, whose comedy, "Thierry," was being performed in Berlin, visited the German capital and attended the twenty-fifth anniversary of Max Reinhardt's entrance into the theatrical profession. At a dinner at which Gerhardt Hauptmann was the host the German poet greeted Bernard as typical of "the European mind, the European soul awakening after a night filled with dark, stormy, bloody dreams." Bernard alluded to Anatole France, who, like Hauptmann, worked for peace but supported his country when war began.

In an address that Paul Valéry, the French poet, gave at the French Embassy in Berlin before an audience of French and Germans the European spirit of the Middle Ages was recalled and contrasted with the nationalistic trend of modern politics. M. Valéry said the differences between the scientific and the political ways of thinking were so great that the trained mind of the scholar often was unable to comprehend what he read in his newspaper. M. Valéry and others spoke in similar vein at a meeting of the German branch of the League for European Understanding, his thesis strikingly resembling that advanced so eloquently by Romain Rolland before the war in his novel, "Jean-Christophe."

Friendly Feeling in Germany.

While laying stress upon the differences between the French and German points of view and the difficulties of a genuine understanding, Henri Beraud of the Journal emphasizes equally the friendly feeling toward the French that he encountered in all parts of Germany. He criticizes his own countrymen for "the parochialism which makes them, almost alone of all peoples, incapable of judging other countries," and condemns what he calls the French "policy of pin-pricks" that has delayed the return to a peace-time state of mind. "We are neighbors," he observes, "and yet we live side by side like two peoples separated by oceans. We have tried to understand. They have tried. I recall reading, on the front of a building constructed in France by the Germans, this quotation from Goethe, 'He who can understand is not a foreigner.' That was at the Lyons Fair in July, 1914, two weeks before the mobilization."

Jules Sauerwein, writing in the Matin, is an ardent and able champion of the rapprochement and the evacuation of the occupied territories of Germany, "which would be one of its consequences." He recently pointed out what he regarded as the bad logic of the peace treaty in providing for a gradual reduction of the Rhineland occupation during fifteen years, "which results in the paradox that Germany is to be freed of military surveillance precisely at the moment when, in all human probability, she will have regained her strength." The policy of erecting various parts of Europe as safeguards against Germany he considers no longer possible, "especially since France is financially weakened, Italy disturbed and Russia disquieting."

The opposition to the Briand policy, as exemplified by Locarno and Thoiry, has become vociferous in certain quarters in proportion as the disposition in France toward extending friendship and confidence to Germany has grown. It might be said to issue from two states of mind—one representing a sort of emotional inertia, the persistence of the attitude cultivated in war-time; the other characteristic of the nationalists and the military men, who decline to envisage the future in a manner different from the past.

Typical of the first is a patriotic and intelligent young French woman who regrets that France has had any relations whatever with Germany after the war. The second attitude is personified by M. Clemenceau and Marshal Foch, who regard war as inevitable and more or less normal and believe that France's first duty is to be able to take her own part, as the late Theodore Roosevelt used to express it.

A middle-aged Frenchman in Alsace recently said to the writer: "There will be another war, perhaps within fifteen years. Germany is too young, too strong a nation to be content not to wipe out her defeat. I have lived all my life in these border provinces and worked for years to make Alsace and Lorraine French again. I spent four years in a German prison during the war. Before my daughter grows up I shall move elsewhere. I have had enough. I have done my share."

The Other Side Heard.

The Vicomte de Guichen is one of those who believe that Germany came off rather well in the war and that she is as dangerous as ever. He points in a recent article to the superior birth rate and population of Germany and recalls that every time he has crossed the Rhine he has heard it argued that Germany cannot treat as an equal a country like France, "which is losing in population." The Echo de Paris M. Poincaré now, like President Wilson in 1917, does not indict the German people, only their former Government.

While the nationalists in France, especially M. Poincaré, adhere rigidly to the contention that the responsibility for the war was settled once and for all in the Treaty of Versailles, which placed the guilt entirely upon Germany, there are dissenting voices even on this point. Among certain of the younger students and writers there is a disposition to distribute the guilt among all the major Foreign Offices of Europe. Alfred Fabre-Luce's book, 'La Victoire," a study of the documents of pre-war diplomacy, concludes that none of the powers sought very earnestly to avoid the war.

While many Frenchmen, in discussing the birth rate, have characterized their country as one that was losing in virility and lagging behind the other great powers, and while there have been, in France as in Britain, in the latter years plenty of prophets of decline, it can scarcely be said that the above attitude is widely entertained in France. It is mentioned here because of its sources and because it forms a part of the content of the French mind at this moment.

It is at least reassuring to turn from these counsels of despair to the alluring possibilities for international accord that are pictured by the vigorous and healthily imaginative minds of certain business men and economists.

In this age of great aggregations of capital and machinery, when convalescent Europe is observing in a mood of emulation the superb continental economic union across the Atlantic, this extra-national cast of thought of the industrialists and economists is perhaps the most encouraging development of all. When the economic interests of France and Germany are genuinely interrelated, rapprochement in the broader sense will become far less difficult.

TWO FOREIGN MINISTERS

has conducted a vigorous campaign against what it calls the "criminal evacuation" of the Rhineland," and argued that the Southern Germans actually desired the French troops to remain. M. S. de Givet, in the Revue Hebdomadaire, presents a severe indictment of the Briand diplomacy on the ground that it has conceded far too much for the best interests of France.

Many difficult questions remain to be dealt with, of course, before the political rapprochement envisaged by Briand and Stresemann can be completed. Among them are disarmament; the possible placing of the control of German war matériel under the authority of the League; the Rhineland occupation, which the Germans want to do away with as soon as possible; the Sarre and the delicate question of responsibility for the war. By raising the point as to war guilt Herr Stresemann marred the harmony achieved at Thoiry, bringing from M. Poincaré the suggestion that the present German Government disavow the acts of the Imperial Government of 1914.

OLD 101 RANCH IS NOW MODERN

Wild West Manners Have Given Place to New Efficiency

THE famous 101 Ranch, near Ponca City, Okla., no longer stands for the old Wild West, its traditions associated with stage coach robberies, bucking broncos and lariats having been exchanged for earmarks of modern progress. Longhorns and wild ponies still romp there and a buffalo herd occupies a corner of the 110,000 acres; but these survivals are reminiscent of the past rather than typical of the present. The 101 Ranch, established in pioneer days for the purpose of handling herds of cattle brought north from Texas along the Chisholm Trail to the Cherokee Strip, has become an agricultural experiment station and model stock farm.

Its longhorns are far outnumbered by Holsteins, shorthorns and Herefords, of which it has some 1,200, said to be the largest herd of these cattle in America. The ranch raises its own wheat, corn and hay to take care of the livestock. It boasts a poultry yard with 5,000 hens, the biggest commercial apple orchard in the State, fifty acres of grapes and its own varieties of persimmons, pecans and mulberries. In recognition of its achievements in building up an Oklahoma acclimated line of fine fruits and vegetables the State Agricultural and Mechanical College now requires its agricultural students to spend two weeks a year at the ranch studying experimental work.

Where formerly stood the "dugout" which Colonel George Miller built with his own hands for his bride in 1879, now stands the imposing "White House," resembling a handsome suburban residence and containing all the comforts and luxuries of the city.

A more generous gift it is impossible to imagine

—a beautiful Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan..Will this princely gift be "theirs" on Christmas morning?

A TRULY fine motor-car—what woman wouldn't thrill at the thought of having it?

What mother, wife, or daughter wouldn't everlastingly be grateful for such magnificent evidence of your Christmas generosity?

The Willys-Knight Great Six is a real Christmas Car, regally luxurious, extraordinarily comfortable, beautiful almost beyond expression.

A very powerful car, very fast, exceedingly active. Modernly engineered, modernly designed. The

A complete catalog of all Sedans of all makes in the luxury group would reveal, in this Great Six Sedan, more features of convenience and control and a greater sensing of comfort for women-drivers than could be found in practically any other.

Willys-Knight Great Six was the first to present the most advanced engineering practices of Europe combined with wholly new and greatly improved American performance standards.

To the American owner, this distinguished automobile brings the same type of power-plant used in the most costly cars made abroad—the French Panhard and Voisin, the Belgian Minerva, the British Daimler-Knight...

This great feature—the Knight sleeve-valve engine is patented, protected, exclusive. It is a feature other manufacturers would pay millions to get. Because it is an engine you'll never wear out. You never have to lay it up for carbon cleaning. It has no valves to grind. It is the only automobile engine in the world that actually improves with use. The only engine that grows quieter, smoother and more powerful with every mile.

Why not decide today to make this the most memorable Christmas those nearest and dearest have ever experienced? The way is clear. On the morning of the 25th, let there be awaiting them at the door a gloriously beautiful Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan.

Willys-Knight Great Six prices from $1750 to $2295. Prices f. o. b. factory and specifications subject to change without notice.

All Willys-Knight Great Sixes now are equipped with silent Belflex shackles—a tremendous engineering advance over the noisy metal shackles of other cars. Belflex stops all chassis rattles and squeaks, deadens road-vibration, completely eliminates the need for chassis lubrication. A noiseless, flexible fabric—shock-absorbing, wear-resisting, rubberized—Belflex now gives permanent chassis silence, diminishing wear at every point of the car.

MOTORISTS GIVE BOND TO APPEAR

Novel Plan to Take Sting Out of Arrests Is Evolved by Indiana Club With Sanction of Officials

SOMETHING new in the long and troublesome history of uncomfortable contacts between the erring motorists and the law-enforcing officer has been evolved by the Hoosier State Automobile Association of Indiana. It is an "appearance bond," and while it does not presume to lessen the possibility of arrest for any infraction of the Motor Vehicle act, it endeavors to make the immediate situation more satisfactory both for the motorist and the police officer.

The appearance bond is decorated in the style of a typical bond. In addition to instructions to the arresting officer and the member, the bond carries the member's signature, together with a brief identification regarding his height, weight, color of eyes, complexion and address. There is a space for a member to write his identifying signature in the presence of the officer when arrested, and another space in which the officer is instructed to write the license number of the car.

An Indiana officer, State or municipal, will in most cases accept the bond as assurance that the motorist will appear before the proper authorities at the right time, provided, of course, that the identification tallies with the information on the bond. If the information is in order and the member acts upon the suggestion of the club not to argue with the officer the bond serves to simplify the whole process and renders it unnecessary for any immediate action in the case, which might interfere with the motorist's plans for the day.

The thought behind the system is that many drivers who are willing to take their medicine when they have overstepped the limits of good reason cannot afford to be delayed while on their particular errand and that it also assists in the administration of the motor laws by requiring less of the arresting officer's attention with each violator.

Bond Saves Loss of Time.

The club recognizes that members are frequently called upon to make emergency trips under circumstances where they are inadvertently negligent and in such instances a long detention at the time of arrest might be a genuine hardship not justified by the seriousness of the violation.

Through the presentation of the bond the arresting officer, as well as his superiors, is assured that "in the event our member should fail to appear or to pay fine if levied, and after usual police efforts have been exhausted, then the Hoosier State Automobile Association will expend not to exceed $35 in apprehending evader, or in lieu thereof will pay the amount of bail normally assessed, at the discretion of the Executive Committee of the State Association."

It is interesting to note that the whole plan is waived in cases where the traffic law violation is one of intoxication. This plan, like others that are being considered in various sections of the country, is designed as a convenience to both motorists and police officials and not as a loophole for the drunken driver.

Since the information regarding the arrest necessarily comes to the attention of the automobile association it is believed that members will make a special effort not to be guilty of any violation while in that State. This introduces the theory that publicity in arrest may have a deterrent effect upon drivers who do not keep before them the importance of being earnest.

Before completing arrangements for the presentation of the bond to its members the association took up the matter with the proper officials, securing the approval of the Secretary of the State of Indiana. Through him the association was able to secure the cooperation of the State motor vehicle police. The police, in turn, interviewed the various Justices of the Peace and assured them that the bond would be respected.

Official Sanction Obtained.

In order that the purpose of the bond would be clear to all those who would have occasion to follow its provisions the Hoosier State Association's representatives visited Mayors as well as Chiefs of Police of county seat towns. Their cooperation was assured, and Indiana now has what is reported as a model system in automotive arrests.

The details in connection with the presentation of the bond to the arresting officer are relied upon to make the arrest much more of a business proposition, eliminating the friction and verbal discussions which often accompany the meeting of accused and accuser. Motorists do not need to invent excuses for not going with the officer to the police court, nor is it necessary for the officer and the Justice of the Peace to resort to the usual procedure in order to be assured that the violator will appear when his case comes up.

Reduced to a business proposition, this improved system of arrest may be a great improvement over its predecessors. The automobile has accustomed the general public to arrest and the fear and trembling of yesterday, together with the give and take of heated vocabulary, are out of date.

The motorist and the police are becoming better acquainted, and such plans as the acceptance bond are likely to play a vital rôle in bringing about a better understanding between these parties whose interest—law and order—is mutual.

This was illustrated in a certain city recently when a motorist who had been tagged for violation of the parking regulations decided to look up the officer on the beat and discuss the matter with him. Upon locating his accuser he learned that the tagging had been without the officer's approval, the order coming from the postal authorities, who were annoyed by having motorists park so near the entrance to the postoffice and who insisted upon the tagging of any one who left a car within an inch of the forbidden ground. The officer would have been reported had he not written out a tag, even though the circumstances did not warrant an arrest. By getting down to the facts and discussing the matter with the officer, the motorist saved himself much trouble.

When there is more genuine respect for the law and for those who are charged with law enforcement, there will be more common sense and fewer violations. The Indiana plan suggests the possibilities of developing police officers from foes to friends and motorists from violators to vanguards of safety and sanity in driving.

USED CAR PROBLEM SERIOUS IN ENGLAND

IF it were not for the competition of foreign makes driving our manufacturers to give their agents 'service' discounts, cars would be catalogued at lower prices, second-hand cars would bring proportionately higher prices, and the trade would have less occasion to quarrel about price-cutting and party-exchange values," says H. Thornton Reuter in discussing, in The London Telegraph, the used car problem in England.

The American car invasion, he explains, led to the offer of a larger discount to dealers than the customary 10 per cent. hitherto allowed by British manufacturers, and these discounts of 15 to 25 per cent. from the American side were generally met by the English makers.

He also adds that these discounts not only caused the secondhand value to fall to a very low and uncertain figure, but it also encouraged the trader to volunteer to do work for nothing during the first year on the cars he sold, which he termed giving "service."

If a buyer took a car without service, he paid the list price, but received a rebate in cash. The Motor Trade Association was formed to combat this price cutting, but it did not stabilize secondhand prices, because, to quote Mr. Reuter, "competition for orders, as the number of motor agents increased, made individual dealers adopt an obvious method of defeating the M. T. A., while getting nominally the full list price for the new cars they sold. This was to take an old car in part exchange and allow a much higher value for it than it would fetch under ordinary selling conditions."

The used car problem, therefore, which is fundamentally based on the "trade-in" value offered for the old car, is evidently quite similar in England to conditions in America.

T. G. Simpson of Nottingham at a meeting of motor dealers recently said that dealers usually looked upon the secondhand car as a nuisance, yet it might be said to be just as valuable to the trade as the new car. He meant that the handling of the secondhand car on organized lines could be made proportionally as profitable as a deal in a new car. Approximately 5,000 motor agents held over £3,000,000 worth of secondhand cars, and their average value was £150, with a margin of difference of £10.

Mr. Reuter quotes the prices obtained at an auction sale of motor cars in London on Nov. 16, to show that the average of £150 may be regarded as too high. Among the cars were three American makes; and one, an Essex roadster, brought the highest price of the lot, 76 guineas. It was a 1925 model, all the others being from 1920 to 1923. The other American cars were a Dodge roadster and Chevrolet touring, 1921 models, which sold for 18 guineas each.

ITEMS OF INTEREST IN THE MOTOR TRADE

HARRY M. FANCHER, accounting consultant of the National Automobile Dealers' Association, will be the chief speaker at the New York district meeting of the association at the Hotel Commodore on Jan. 10, during the National Show Week. He will discuss motor car profits from the dealers' attitude.

Retail deliveries of 4,419 new motor cars and trucks by Dodge Brothers dealers in the United States and Canada during the week ended Nov. 27 exceeded all previous weekly records during the last quarter of any year. Deliveries during the four weeks of November totaled 14,676 units.

The Lincoln Motor Car Company announces an increase in the price on all models of $200. The new prices went into effect early this week.

The Chevrolet Motor Company reports retail sales in November of 73,474 Chevrolet cars and trucks—a monthly record exceeded only once in the company's history. That was in May this year, when the sales aggregate was 74,908 cars.

The third and final sales meeting of the Automobile Merchants' Association conducted under the auspices of the National Automobile Dealers' Association, will be held next Wednesday evening at the Hotel Astor. Harry M. Fancher will speak on the subject of "Larger Profits Through Controlled Expense."

J. F. Winchester will lead the discussion on maintenance and service at the joint meeting next Thursday evening of the metropolitan section, S. A. E., with the Motor Truck Association of America and the Automotive Service Association. The meeting will be at the Hotel Woodstock.

E. T. Strong, President of the Buick Motor Company, announces the appointment of C. W. Churchill to the office of general sales manager. Mr. Strong recently vacated this office to assume the Presidency. Mr. Churchill has been with the Buick Company for several years.

Ned W. Barton, former sales manager of the Olds Motor Works, has been appointed a member of the factory sales organization of the Peerless Motor Car Corporation.

Plant expansion that will increase Oldsmobile production facilities one-third is being made by the Olds Motor Works at Lansing, Mich. An additional building is being added to the heat-treating plant which will double its capacity. The chassis assembly facilities are being practically doubled to provide for the greater output in the other departments.

Among the cars using the Fedco number plate system for automobile theft prevention and detection are the Chrysler, Dusenberg, Stutz, Marmon, Jordan, Gardiner and Rickenbacker.

Martin L. Pulcher, President of the Federal Motor Truck Company, announces the appointment of R. T. Hodgkins as sales director. For several years Mr. Hodgkins was sales manager for the Studebaker Corporation.

NEED WIDE JERSEY HIGHWAYS FOR HUDSON BRIDGE TRAFFIC

THREE express highways, each of which should be at least 100 feet wide, will be required for the prospective motor vehicle traffic flowing through Bergen County and other sections of New Jersey on the completion of the Hudson River Bridge, according to M. B. Leahy, President of the realty firm of that name. These new routes, he also points out, should connect with those already planned by the State Highway Commission to bear the brunt of the through traffic utilizing the vehicular tunnel, which will soon be opened.

"The principal one of these would serve traffic bound west and northwest," says Mr. Leahy. "This route should follow Cedar Lane to Teaneck Road; north to State Street, West Englewood Square; west over the new viaduct across the West Shore Railroad tracks to River Road; thence across the Hackensack River to connect with the Kinderkamack and Paramus roads.

"A second highway should be created almost in its entirety from Cedar Lane south, through the Hackensack and Kearny meadows, to connect with the Lincoln Highway outside of Newark. This road should connect with the principal outlet of the vehicular tunnel.

"The third main outlet, that to the north, exists almost complete at present. Passing through Englewood, it should connect with the Piermont Road, which parallels the Hudson River to Albany.

"A fourth major traffic artery should connect with the road passing through West Englewood at a point some distance beyond the Hackensack River and, passing between Paterson and Passaic, run southward to Montclair and the Oranges.

"These express highways should be 100 feet wide and skirt congested traffic areas as much as possible. Their use should be restricted to through traffic and a higher speed than usually permitted. Local traffic would use the subsidiary highways wherever possible. Thus, the two distinct classes of traffic would be separated, and convenience, speed and safety be best served.

"The building of these essential express highways will speed up development of the residential, commercial and industrial areas along their routes. An immense amount of traffic will flow through West Englewood when these super-highways are in operation and their effect will give a powerful impetus to the progress of the entire section."

S. A. E. HAS 6,052 MEMBERS

The membership rolls of the Society of Automotive Engineers now contain 6,052 names, including several hundred foreign members. This compares with 5,277 on Nov. 7, 1925, and shows a net gain during the year of 775 members.

DECORATIONS FOR NATIONAL SHOW

SAMUEL A. MILES, the veteran manager of America's National Automobile shows, announced yesterday that for the decorative scheme of the forthcoming national show in the Grand Central Palace, beginning Jan. 8, a South American background has been selected. The choice was dictated largely by reason of the generous welcome extended by the South and Central American countries to the delegation of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, under whose auspices the national shows are held, on the occasion of its visit there a few months ago.

The lobby will be adorned with draperies, the flags of South American countries, paintings and flowers.

South American landscape effects will be carried out on all of the four floors of the Palace used for the show. The columns will be covered with imported Spanish gold cloth.

Sedan
$1245 f.o.b. Detroit

Attempt to compare Chrysler "60" features in number, in quality—against those of the ordinary six in its price field, and the advantage in favor of Chrysler at once will convince you that comparison is impossible.

Of course, the Chrysler "60" has finely balanced seven-bearing crankshaft, impulse neutralizer, oil-filter, air-cleaner, Chrysler four-wheel hydraulic brakes, full pressure lubrication, manifold heat control and road levelizers—has had these and other "new" features ever since its introduction.

But the really distinctive features of the "60" are its typically Chrysler features—its superb beauty, its inimitable performance, its amazing speed and acceleration, its unfailing dependability and long life, its handling and riding ease, and its outstanding low prices—features that are unique and must remain unique due to the Chrysler plan of Quality Standardization.

You are cordially invited—indeed, urged to try the Chrysler "60" against the two or three other cars you may consider comparable. In common with its scores of thousands of enthusiastic owners, you will be bound to rate it beyond comparison—utterly unapproachable by any other six of its type and price.

Touring Car . . $1075 Coach $1145

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR ON TOPICS IN THE NEWS

MORE HOPE IS SEEN FOR CHINA

That Country's Position, Though Still Critical, Is Better Than It Has Been for Years

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The situation in China is critical, but more hopeful than it has been for ten years or longer. That is not the impression conveyed by most of the recent news dispatches that have come from China, for which there may be a reason. In contrast with these dispatches, such letters as the following from correspondents in various parts of China are noteworthy. This extract is from a letter dated Nov. 2, from a competent observer residing in Nanking:

"I cannot see any adequate reason for being discouraged about China, or about the work of Christian missions in China at the present time. While it is true that there has been considerable fighting in certain parts of China this last Summer and early Fall, all other parts of China have been very peaceful and the farmers generally have harvested one of the best crops they have had in a number of years.

"I do not find, except here and there, any note of pessimism, and most people who have any touch with the situation at all are decidedly optimistic. One factor that too many people lose sight of is the rank and file of Chinese—the farmers, the artisans, the merchants and the literary class. There may be a number of years more of fighting (probably there will be), but in spite of the wars of the last seven or eight years China's trade has increased, nationalistic consciousness has been developed, public opinion on State matters is being crystalized, and not in the last ten years have the more thoughtful elements in the Chinese population been more hopeful over the happy outcome of the present political difficulties."

The official reports of the Customs Revenue continue to show an annual increase. Foreign trade is growing. Some people in China must be prospering. Can it be that the tales of woe that come from the treaty ports are due to the fact that the process of eliminating the foreign middleman has begun, and that the Chinese are themselves taking over the trade with other countries? If so, the American and European manufacturers who have real goods to sell need not worry.

The recently published report of the Commission on Extraterritoriality represents a great achievement. The American Chairman, Mr. Strawn, deserves much credit in having obtained the unanimous agreement of so many powers on constructive proposals. Unfortunately, the report comes five years too late. Dilatoriness and hesitancy and failure to understand developing public opinion in China have combined for a number of years to make the policy of Western powers in their relations with China ineffective or obstructive.

The dispatches of the last two or three days that have come from London and from Shanghai indicate that the British Government is adopting a more openly friendly attitude and is dealing with the situation in a realistic manner. For many months any well-informed observer will have noted the significant fact that British Government policy was not being shaped by the opinions expressed in treaty port newspapers. It seems that the present moment might therefore be favorable for united action by the United States, Great Britain and such other powers as might willingly join them in openly declaring complete readiness to adjust their relations with China on a basis of equality. The absence of a strong central Government may for the time being make impossible any immediate negotiations for the drafting of new treaties.

But some unilateral declarations from the side of the Western powers might be helpful. For example, with reference to extraterritorial jurisdiction, regarding which the commission recommends progressive abolition, would it not be advisable for the powers to declare immediately that such jurisdiction will not be claimed outside the open ports, and even there only by such powers as have appointed consuls with judicial responsibilities, thus having made due provision for the exercise of such jurisdiction? Other steps that might be taken immediately will be readily suggested as soon as the willingness to move forward is apparent. The Western powers are called upon to deal not merely with the logic of the situation but with an "oppression psychosis" of the Chinese people. For the good of trade, for the sake of harmonious relations, for the benefit of China herself, some imaginative statesmanship is needed, that will deal with the realities of the situation and not merely with some of its symptoms.

In one of the special articles in THE TIMES last Sunday the statement was made: "The influence of the West, to be sure, and of Christianity in particular, is so seriously threatened as to appear to be almost doomed." Nothing could be more untrue. The students of China are eager to come to the West in ever-increasing numbers. The schools in China that teach science and other Western learning, including Christianity, were never so crowded as now. Christian missions are facing a situation of challenging opportunity. The reports of the annual meeting of the National Christian Council that have just reached us tell of a meeting of unprecedented success and hopefulness for the future. The opposition to Christianity that has been awakened in some places is evidence of its progress. To have been ignored at such a time as this in China would have been proof of ineffectiveness.

As with the business man, the missionary who is a mere middleman transmitting the opinions of others, with no experience or ideas of his own, will be rapidly eliminated. But for the man or woman with a vital experience and with the ability to share it with others, there was never a greater call to come to China than that of today. And for folks who are desirous of building a better world, in which progress is measured not by personal material profits but by the welfare of men and women, this is the day in which to strengthen and support every effort to share with China whatever good we believe we possess.

CHICAGO'S EARLY SKYSCRAPER

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Magazine Section of THE TIMES there appeared recently an article headed "Sire of the Skyscraper," which states: "In 1888, when New York's highest building, an apartment house, was fourteen stories, and there was not anywhere on the face of the earth a building of steel frame work construction, L. S. Buffington, Minneapolis architect, took out patents in America, Great Britain, Germany and France for a twenty-eight-story office building, having a continuous skeleton of metal and a covering of veneer. Buffington had patented the skyscraper."

Further on in this article it states, "By the Winter of 1883 Mr. Buffington had drawn complete plans of the interior construction of a steel framework building and had applied for a patent."

In the Fall of 1883, the Home Insurance Company of Chicago decided to build an office building on the corner of La Salle and Adams Streets in Chicago. Plans were submitted by various architects. The plans adopted were those prepared by William Le Baron Jenney, architect and engineer, of Chicago, although the design was absolutely novel at that time. His idea was that in each story the floors, the partitions and exterior walls be carried story by story independently on the columns. This system is used today and is known as steel skeleton construction.

In 1896 The Engineering Record, at the request of the Bessemer Steamship Company, carried on an inquiry to discover, if possible, the inventor of steel skeleton construction, and although Mr. Buffington's patent and claims to the invention were mentioned at the time, the consensus of opinion among architects and engineers was that William Le Baron Jenney was the true inventor and first to put the idea into practice. The Bessemer Steamship Company therefore decided to name one of its new ore boats the W. L. B. Jenney.

I believe that you will find on investigation of the facts that my grandfather, William Le Baron Jenney, who died in Los Angeles in June, 1907, was the inventor and introducer of steel skeleton construction as the system is used today. The Home Insurance Building in Chicago, designed in 1883 and finished in 1884, under the supervision of my grandfather, was the first of this type in the world. This building still stands after forty-two years as a monument to his genius.

THE FIENNES LADY OF BANBURY CROSS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Magazine Section of THE TIMES there appeared a contribution from F. L. Minnigerode entitled "Famous Banbury Cross is Threatened," in which he refers to the well-known nursery rhyme "Ride a Cock Horse to Banbury Cross," it occurs to me that it might interest THE TIMES readers to know the original words of it, which I fancy are known to few persons.

Some two miles from Banbury is Broughton Castle, the seat of Lord Saye and Sele, whose family name is Fiennes, and for some centuries they have been Lords of the Manor of Banbury. A few years ago Lord Saye and Sele asked me if I knew the nursery rhyme, whereupon I said the first four lines. He replied that though those were the now accepted words the whole point was lost, for the original reading was:

Ride a cock horse
To Banbury Cross
To see a Fiennes lady,
Ride on a white horse,

and that when it became a universal nursery rhyme "Fiennes" had only a local meaning, and so "fine" was substituted for the family name.

One can imagine, ages ago, some youngster calling to another "Come and look at Fiennes lady on her white horse" as one of the ladies of the castle rode through the village, probably returning from hawking with her falcon on her wrist, which would account for the words "with rings on her fingers and bells on her toes," referring to the rings and bells on the jessies or leather thongs on the bird's legs.

It may also interest you to know that on the roof of the castle is a room about eight feet square, approached by a short stepladder, in which Cromwell, Hampden and Pym decided on civil war in 1642.

INCONTROVERTIBLE

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Lost amid the 10,000 words of the Presidential message, neglected alike by writers of news leads and editorials, is the most sapient and sententious utterance of Calvin Coolidge.

"Water is the irreplaceable natural resource," he solemnly informs the Congress. "Its precipitations cannot be increased."

The most irreconcilable Democrat must agree with him. The whole world must acknowledge such profound wisdom.

Possibly the Executive was afraid lest some Corn Belt legislator might offer a bill for Federal intervention to augment the annual rainfall.

BAY STATER.

New York, Dec. 8, 1926.

CAN THIS BE TRUE?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Charles Klyse asks why many of our most prominent bankers and business men travel on foreign-operated vessels.

Has he ever heard or read of the Volstead law? Probably these travelers have been told that the law is more or less enforced on American vessels, so they very naturally keep off.

CONSIDERING CONSUMERS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is the consumer to be barred from deriving advantage from a bumper crop of wheat, or of corn, or of cotton? Should agricultural products be protected by Congress, why may not the same advantage be claimed for products of manufacture?

JOSEPH W. STRAY.

FARMERS AND THE TARIFF

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Eastern press, excluding THE TIMES and The World, seems to think that the farmers, West and South, should live like peasants and should leave such luxuries as automobiles, radios, &c., to the more prosperous tariff-protected Eastern people, and themselves be content with the bare necessities of life.

The mass of farmers West and South are high-spirited, educated, independent citizens who will not for long submit to these apparent assumptions of the East. They will demand equality of governmental treatment; equality with the tariff-protected manufacturers, labor, railroads and big business.

A trifle unfair is the statement that the farmers, their societies or their elected representatives have been unable to agree upon what should be done. It is unfair to suggest that they should be unanimous in some plan for relief; they have shown Congress and the President that they are suffering from inequality of economic conditions, losing their farms, which have shrunk more than 50 per cent. in value, getting deeper and deeper into debt. It then became the business of Congress and the President elected to office for that purpose to devise and formulate the remedy and enact the necessary legislation. At the last session of Congress the farmers did devise for themselves a bill which they believed would give them the desired relief, but they were met by the President and Eastern Senators—with one exception, Senator Copeland of New York—and by Eastern Congressmen, with the vague objection that their proposed legislation was "economically unsound" and would "fix prices," ignoring the fact that the high protective tariff fixes prices which Eastern manufacturers extort from the farmer for such of their wares as he is obliged to buy with his eighty-three-cent dollar. Does not the sacred tariff fix the prices in this country which farmers and others are obliged to pay for the output of such infant giants as Mr. Mellon's Aluminum Company?

The vaunted prosperity headlined by the Eastern press is non-existent here. A farm, heretofore considered the safest, most conservative of investments, is no longer an asset but a liability. Farm owners have not only seen more than half the value of their farms disappear, but both they and their tenants have seen their farm incomes dwindle to less than half of what it formerly was. In consequence, business in all cities in the Midwest except manufacturing centres, mercantile, banking, professional and all other lines is languishing, while the Eastern press boasts of abounding prosperity.

It is a long step forward when such Eastern journals as THE TIMES and The World editorially concede that there is a real and serious Southern and Western farm problem.

One of the most distinguished living economists in an unanswerable letter has shown that the McNary-Haugen bill is economically sound. No one has attempted to answer that letter.

When the McNary-Haugen bill or its equivalent is passed, either at the December session or by the new Congress, as I believe it will be, if the President vetoes it, he will have given a better reason for his action than that it is "economically unsound," or "fixes prices," otherwise there will eventually be a change of administration, if not of party control, and the tariff wall, in spots at least, will come down.

Rising Cost of Proving Her Identity Annoys an American Woman in France

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Among the thousand-and-one incidents—all of them disagreeable—connected with the French identity card, let me cite one. Less than a year ago the fee for these cards was suddenly raised to 68 francs. The old card, costing 12 francs and good for two years, I had been assured when I took it out was declared invalid.

Forthwith, I gave up my twelve-franc card obtained but a few months before and applied for a new one. This card, I was again assured by the French authorities, would be good for two years from the date of issue. They gave me a receipt, but no card.

Months passed, but no word reached me that my card was ready. Then came the order for another new identity card at 375 francs. By the advice of the American Consulate, I at once took my receipt to the Identity Card Bureau and asked for the card I had not yet received and which was valid, according to the receipt, for two years from date of issue, Jan. 22, 1926. Today I obtained that card, dated Jan. 1, 1925.

I must therefore apply for a new identity card on Jan. 1 next. It was useless to expostulate with the French authorities—as useless as with the waiters in the restaurant car from Cherbourg when they short change one, as seems to be their invariable habit. The cost is by no means the most disagreeable thing connected with the identity-card procedure in France. The time it takes is a fatiguing and unnecessary item. How long the new 375-franc card for which I must apply in one month will remain valid no one has the courage to tell me. I think we Americans have no need to apologize for Ellis Island so long as French identity-card technic is what it is.

ALISON REYES.

MEXICO AND THE CATHOLICS

Mr. Guthrie's Opinion on Constitutional Provisions Governing Religion Is Disputed

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I find myself in disagreement with some of the statements in Mr. Guthrie's opinion on the religious provisions of the Mexican Constitution—rather, to be more precise, with one statement which appears throughout the opinion variously worded, and which constitutes the fundamental ratio opinandi of the President of the Bar of New York City.

Mr. Guthrie considers the Mexican religious question under five headings: (1) international law, (2) separation of Church and State, (3) confiscation of Church property, (4) education and (5) international relations. I am not specially interested in the considerations made by Mr. Guthrie under these headings at this time, unless they relate specifically to the basic premise upon which Mr. Guthrie proceeds to elaborate his arguments, and, finally, to rest his case.

I think it is ill-fitting to apply American citations of American decisions, written by American judges on American questions, to a constitutional provision embodied in the organic charter of another sovereign State. An American case, no matter by whom or where decided, can never be a precedent in international law.

The sources of international law as a system of precepts and norms, as they are understood and acted upon in the concert of civilized nations, are definite and pretty well settled, and I dare say any good treatise on international law will show that international custom, diplomatic correspondence, arbitral decisions, treaties and treatises on international law are alone recognized as the orthodox sources of that so-called law.

Municipal law, on the other hand, even if it be that of the United States, can never be the standard of international law, much less a quantitative rule by which the laws and constitutions of equally sovereign States can be measured as absolutely and finally as Mr. Guthrie, and the interests he represents, would wish.

In this light Mr. Guthrie's statement, in fact the thesis embodied in his opinion, to the effect that the Mexican provisions would be held by the American courts to be unconstitutional and void whether enacted by the American Congress or by the Legislatures of any of the several States, is so much wasted paper. The provisions to which he refers are not enactments of the Mexican Congress or of any of the Mexican Legislatures. They are contained in the Mexican Constitution, and they are as sacrosanct and to the Mexican people legally as binding as, for instance, any constitutional provision of the American Constitution is to the American people. Mr. Guthrie seems to believe that a law in the United States may only be found, aside from Judge-made law, in the statute books of Congress, or in the consolidated laws of the several States. Internationalist or not, no one should forget that also in foreign countries a constitution is the supreme law of the land.

It is odd, to say the least, to be informed that Mexico, and by extension presumably all Hispanic-American States, must, before they include a provision in their constitutions, consult the United States reports, refer to Roee's notes and run down the cases in Shephard's official citator to ascertain if the proposed provisions are in harmony with the latest pronouncement of the Supreme Court in matters of American constitutional law.

Mr. Guthrie's exhaustive opinion would seem to be apt to increase considerably the confusion and entanglement of the Mexican religious question by the introduction of an utterly false and inacceptable standard: the validity of constitutional provisions of a sovereign State versus American constitutional law.

ENRIQUE MUNGUIA JR.,

COOLIDGE AND THE COURT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The interesting letter of Emerson Curtis concerning the criticism of President Coolidge's Armistice Day speech impels me to express some thoughts which I hope neither Mr. Curtis nor his friend who is so close to the President will take amiss.

I have heretofore sought more than once to direct public attention to the fact that the Senate by the inclusion in its resolution of the Fifth Reservation went much further than the Republican platform pledge in imposing qualifications upon our proposed adherence to the World Court, yet when this reservation was introduced in the Senate no expression of disapproval or effort to hold the Senate to the platform pledge came from the President.

The conference at Geneva, notwithstanding our rather curt declination of its invitation, found this unfortunate reservation not quite so plain in its meaning as our Government would have us believe, and when, after a most friendly discussion, it formulated a report containing an earnest effort to reach a reasonable interpretation of its terms, which would have admitted this country to a position of perfect equality with the members of the League Council in respect to advisory opinions, I must admit that the President's attitude toward this report, as represented by the White House spokesman, implying that equality is not enough for us, does, to me, savor of arrogance.

I cannot believe that a courteous reception of the conference report, with an expression of appreciation of the friendly spirit in which it was conceived, followed by its communication by the President to the Senate, with a recommendation for its consideration in a sincere effort to reach a satisfactory formula, would create in that body so hostile an atmosphere that a two-thirds majority could not be secured in favor of such action. Surely the Democrats as a body are not ready so soon to repudiate the political ideals of President Wilson, and the so-called irreconcilables are, when it comes to a vote, a comparatively insignificant minority.

The President truly stated in his recent speech that the World Court has been the subject of much misrepresentation in this country; but why has he not exposed and combated such misrepresentation? What we greatly need is more complete and accurate education on this subject, and such action on his part would meet with the enthusiastic and vigorous support of many of our foremost citizens who are already enlisted in this cause. On the contrary, his present attitude of acquiescence, it seems to me—and I say it with the greatest regret, however good his intentions may be—tends, most unfortunately, actually to foster a spirit of distrust and suspicion toward foreign nations on the part of our own people.

THE CHANCELLORSVILLE FIGHT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

B. L. Stowe says the playing of the hand of the Fourteenth Connecticut at the Battle of Chancellorsville had such an inspiring effect on Howard's men that they regained the positions they had lost.

The only position that the Eleventh Corps regained was the one on the other side of the Rappahannock that they had left when General Hooker moved out to "force the enemy either to fight him on the place of his own choice or retreat ignominiously." The majority of Howard's men regained that position before midnight following Jackson's attack, and could not be persuaded to abandon it.

Jackson attacked shortly after 5 P. M. By the time it was too dark to continue fighting the Eleventh Corps, band and all, had retreated over five miles. Early the next day the Confederates, led by Jeb Stuart, attacked them behind their breastworks, and if any positions were regained that or any other day, it has certainly escaped the attention of all who have written on the subject.

If General Hooker had listened to his corps commanders, he would not only have stayed on the southern bank of the Rappahannock, but he would have taken the offensive.

TRIALS OF ROGER BACON

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES editorial, "Chemists Not Alchemists," brings up some interesting questions concerning Roger Bacon. It errs in stating that Bacon invented gunpowder, since this commodity was known to the Arabs prior to the thirteenth century, in which Bacon was born. Even the fabulous stories of Friar Bacon, which became exaggerated traditions in England, did not mention gunpowder as among his inventions. Nor can it be justly said that he invented or possessed a microscope as we understand it, but he did have the burning glass, which he is supposed to have invented. Of course, such a glass has magnifying qualities. Although Bacon described a method of constructing a telescope, Dr. Ward of Cambridge University, who is a proficient Baconian scholar, says that this description does not "lead one to conclude that he was in possession of that instrument."

Bacon himself called the burning (magnifying) glass a "miraculous work," and his persecutors said of it that "in time to come the devil will by such means set fire to towns and villages." Tradition ascribes to him the origin of the magical crystal, in which angels and spirits were supposed to appear and give responses.

It is true, he was the prodigy of learning of his time and was, indeed, an excessively learned man in the sciences of theology, astrology and alchemy, and it was chiefly on this account, for he sought by the study and teaching of these sciences to give Oxford University, where he resided, a freer and wider culture, that he was persecuted, twice expelled from the university, and finally imprisoned for fourteen years.

In the age of ignorance and bigotry in which he lived (1214-1294) all superior learning was ascribed to magic and black art. The mathematical science of Pythagoras and the physical science of Hippocrates were so ascribed. On one occasion Bacon said, "to speak to the people of astronomy was to cause one's self to be immediately clamored against as a magician." The art of printing was then regarded by the people and the monks as an invention of the evil one.

Compelled by these popular superstitions and the attending persecutions of the Franciscan Order, of which he was a friar, as well as by the need of uninterrupted concentration, Bacon pursued his chemical researches in the strictest seclusion in and about Sunningwell, and his astronomical studies in the tower of an inconspicuous church in the same neighborhood. His very seclusion and the incomprehensible nature of his pursuits led the suspicious and blectic vulgar to suppose he was in collaboration with the devil and gave rise to all manner of fabulous stories about his achievements in the black art. These stories became, during the succeeding renaissance of learning in England, a large body of legendary fable, woven chiefly about his supposed creation of a speaking brazen head, and other such miraculous inventions, upon which many a play and story was based, including one of the greatest works of old English drama—Greene's "Honorable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay."

When Bacon told some of his contemporary scholar-teachers at Oxford that they ought to study optics, or geometry, or the languages, they asked, with a smile, "What is the use of these things?" What he considered the insufficiency of the then existing studies at the university, and the ignorance as well as the vices of the monks who were the teachers, so incensed and exasperated him that he severely criticised them in his "Compendium Studii Philosophiae" and as a consequence he was for the second time condemned by the General of the Franciscan Order and committed to his fourteen-year imprisonment.

Since civilization began, the spirit and the intellect of man have been at war. Religion and science have never dwelt peaceably together. The present-day conflict between Fundamentalism and Modernism is but an incipient recrudescence of similar but greater conflicts of the centuries past. Bacon was the victim of such a conflict. So was Galileo. Bacon was the Modernist of the thirteenth century. Because of the seemingly miraculous fruits of his researches in the realms of science he was called "Doctor Mirabilis." So dogged and persistent was the ignorance of his time that for a considerable part of his career he was placed under strict supervision by the General of the Franciscans and prohibited from writing for publication.

Although Dr. Newbold asserts the fact that the particular formula for the production of salts of copper, recently deciphered and proven, was written in code to Bacon's profoundly religious nature and his fear of displeasing God by disclosing to the world the secrets of nature, it is inconceivable that one so intimately acquainted with God's benevolence toward mankind and his welfare, as revealed in the sciences, would have committed so grievous a mistake. It seems more probable that, laboring under such strict surveillance and the prohibition of the religious authorities, he kept his notes in code to prevent their being discovered and used against him by his persecuters.

When we consider that the discoveries of modern chemical science, which constitute in industry and medicine one of the greatest wonders of the age, are made in freedom and without restraint by those who have some records, formulas and over eighty-odd known chemical elements to work with, it is the more amazing that one so hampered and utterly devoid of the aid of any of the known quantities or instruments could have pioneered so accurately and accomplished as much as Bacon did in the way of definite and permanent achievement.

The name of Roger Bacon deserves perpetuation by some lasting monument in the nomenclature of the sciences, and particularly in chemistry.

GRAVITATION AND WEIGHTS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Unless THE TIMES correspondent who figures what a 150-pound man should weigh on the moon and on Mercury, Mars, &c., has had a "revelation" as to the truth of the Newtonian theory of gravitation, he would do well to qualify somewhat.

Newton himself rejected his own theory of gravitation from which these figures were derived for sixteen years, because the then available and generally accepted figures of the earth's diameter and the tension of gravity at the surface, accelerating bodies about 32 feet a second, did not fit with the assumed theory of the "square of the distance." Of course, he might obviously have changed the square—plus or minus—to fit the other figures, but Newton was too clear-headed not to see that this would have been reasoning in a circle in so far as proving the reality of gravitation was concerned. He fully realized that if he wanted to assume the theory of attraction as a demonstrated fact, then any schoolboy could figure out "a law" by sacrificing the square of the distance and allowing the given figures to determine what other function of the distance should take its place. But the result would have been an empirical formula, which, however useful in practice, could not have been used to prove the theory of attraction, so he at that time abandoned the idea of proving attraction and only after sixteen years did he again entertain it, and then because calculations with new determinations of the given quantities approached the square very nearly and made him think that further and more accurate determinations of these measurable quantities would show a tendency to still more closely approach the square and hence tend to prove attraction.

Modern measurements and observations have not quite verified the theory of the square, and today astronomers do what Newton declined to do over a period of sixteen years—they increase the square to fit the surface tension and the earth's diameter. This turns the great "law" into an empirical formula that is very useful but renders it an incompetent witness to the truth of the theory of attraction.

The theory that gravitation, if a reality, varies inversely as the square of the distance can be supported by an argument more or less plausible and the physical measurements were accepted as a test of or at least as tending to prove the theory. They have over a long period of time in the hands of the most able and eminent men failed to support the theory exactly.

THE PHONOGRAPH HAS ADVANTAGES

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have often wondered how many persons who appreciate music faithfully reproduced really value the phonograph, especially in its present state of excellence. As a dispenser of music to the discriminating, its place is high and unassailable. It is the one reliable instrument which may be called upon at any moment to render the particular music one wants to hear at a precise moment.

There is not that feeling of misgiving, however slight, which accompanies one on his journey across the room to tune in on the radio—the batteries may be exhausted, the bulbs may have burned out, there may be interference or static; they may not be playing the kind of music one wishes to hear.

From an economic standpoint it may be said of the phonograph that the first cost is practically the last. For, where the radio requires batteries and bulbs which are useless after they are dead, the phonograph requires records which, with proper care, last for many years.

Almost everything in the way of music which is heard over the radio may be heard on the phonograph—and more, too. Who could ever expect to tune in the voices of those now dead or retired who have raised the "concord of sweet sounds" to such exalted heights?

The radio has its place and a very important one, but for uniform satisfaction, versatility, practicality and economy, there is one instrument which, in my opinion, stands preeminent in the field of music reproduction—the phonograph.

SNOWY OWLS AS FOOD

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As I read THE TIMES editorial on the great snowy owl there came to me a memory of the last time I had seen this bird. I was on a canoe trip to Lake Ogoki and was north four days' paddle from the railroad at Kowkash. But the easiest way is to quote from my note book:

"As we left Lake Abamasagi we saw a moose; paddled right up to it; not thirty feet away when it took fright. Then in a tree that overhung the water we saw three snowy owls that let us come very near, just sat and blinked at us. At a distance it looked as if some one had hung out clothes to dry on the tree. They were large birds and not snowy at this season (July 27); a beautiful light brown or golden yellow. As they took alarm and flew away I was surprised at their great stretch of wing. Henry, a guide, said the Indians ate them when they were short of other food."

CHOOSING A LANGUAGE

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Arthur Elliot Sproul desires that English or French should be selected for a language of the universal democracy, but he wants to be fair toward the followers of synthetic languages and call them to a congress, together with the Governments of the world, for selecting a language.

English with its spelling and idioms will never be mastered by any foreigner and French will never be pronounced properly by any Englishman, Slav, Italian or Spaniard.

There is nothing left but to resort to a synthetic language. Esperanto has made progress in the schools of many countries, in radio broadcasting and at the post and telegraph offices and therefore it is necessary to support it.

HARDLY A DRY LAW ARGUMENT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Several reviews have classed "Prohibition at Its Worst," by Irving Fisher, as being of little or no constructive value to the liquor problem, because of the emotional bias on the part of the author. There are, however, a number of accompanying graphs, some of which are based on figures that are interesting if not enlightening. Any one not familiar with Professor Fisher's established view might well mistake them for restriction arguments instead of prohibition arguments.

Each of these graphs is divided into three periods. The years immediately preceding 1917 are designated "Pre-Prohibition," 1917 to 1919 inclusive "War Time Restrictions" and 1920 to 1925 inclusive "National Prohibition."

In Graph 7, which depicts arrests for drunkenness in 626 widely scattered cities, it is shown that in 1917, the first year under war-time restrictions, these arrests decreased 5 per cent. In the second year they dropped 25 per cent. and in the third year there was a further drop of 20 per cent. In 1920, the first year of national prohibition, arrests were down to 35 per cent. of the pre-prohibition level. In each succeeding year under national prohibition the curve is gradually upward, until at the end of 1925 it had climbed to 79 per cent. of the pre-prohibition level. It may be seen, then, that in the three years of war-time restrictions arrests for drunkenness decreased 50 per cent., while in the succeeding six years under national prohibition they increased 44 per cent.

In Graph 20, which shows deaths due to alcoholism, we find that in 1917, the first restricted year, there was a decrease of 5 per cent. The following year, 1918, there occurred an enormous drop of 50 per cent., while the following year shows a further drop of 30 per cent. In 1920, the first year under national prohibition, alcoholic deaths were down to 15 per cent. of the pre-prohibition level. Again the curve turns upward and continues uninterruptedly, until at the end of 1925 it had reached 70 per cent. of the pre-prohibition level. Again we may see that in the three years of war-time restrictions deaths due to alcoholism decreased 65 per cent., while in six years of national prohibition they increased 55 per cent.

In Graph 8, which shows consumption of absolute alcohol, we find an increase of 7 per cent. in the first restricted year. The second and third years, however, show decreases of 30 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively. During the national prohibition period, 1920 to 1925 inclusive, the curve does not turn upward abruptly, as it did in Graphs 7 and 20, but continues downward for a further drop of 23 per cent. The action of the curve in Graph 8, when compared with that of the other two, would indeed seem strange, if not impossible, were it not explained that Graph 8 is based on an estimate and not on figures, and it shows the professor at his best in the selection of an estimate.

To be able to cause an increase of 44 per cent. in arrests for drunkenness and cause 55 per cent. more deaths due to alcoholism with 23 per cent. less alcohol might be considered a success from an economic standpoint, but certainly not from a moral standpoint.

Either the above graphs are worthless because they are not based on facts, or they are excellent arguments for restrictions rather than prohibition.

CAUSE OF MOVING MOUNTAINS PROVES A PUZZLE TO SCIENCE

Colorado, England and Switzerland Have Ominously Shifting Peaks

ONCE again the mountain is going to Mahomet. Dispatches recently from London and Paris report that two mountains have been moving—one in England, the other in Switzerland. The first is Domen Fawr, the moving mountain of Monmouthshire, and the other is Mount Arbino, near Bellinzona.

Last year the inhabitants of Meeker, Col., were greatly perturbed by the behavior of a moving mountain close to the town. The peak had "moved" before, but never enough to cause any damage. In March, 1925, however, the mountain shifted more than a hundred yards in two days, blocking the one road which connected Meeker with the outside world, as no railroad runs to the town. At the same time, according to reports, the shift caused a gulch to be filled and saved the expense of building a bridge. While it is sufficiently rare for a mountain to move at all, it is regarded as even more rare for any good to result from the movement.

Geologists and scientists have often tried to give specific reasons for the cause of this action; but as none of the shifting mountains have contained deposits that warranted working on them, no absolute data have been obtained.

Theories Advanced.

One explanation offered is that the moving mountain becomes topheavy, due to rains or water seepage, with the passing of time, whereupon the lower layers loosen and are unable to hold the heavier upper layers. This results in the sliding of the top to a lower and more secure position.

Some time ago one of the Government Geological Survey scientists put forth another explanation. About 40,000,000 years ago, in the making of the earth, he suggested, the mountain "grew," or ascended, and over a layer of sandstone there spread a thick layer of clay, forming the contour of the mountain. Throughout the ages bits of the clay wash away, until a large part of it loosens and slides down the side to a more secure position. This might be termed a landslide, but sometimes so large a portion loosens and moves that the whole peak seems to be shifted.

According to Julian D. Sears, Acting Director of the United States Geological Survey, it is presumed that the "moving mountains" are nothing but a form of landslide or landslip. Others offer the explanation that because of some internal activity of the earth the base of the mountain becomes loosened and the top, that portion above the earth, shifts. The phenomenon has also been explained by the theory that subterranean water seepage causes a loosening of clay in the mountain, which brings on the shift.

Professor Charles P. Berkey, head of the Department of Geology and Mineralogy at Columbia University, says he is inclined to explain most occurrences of so-called moving mountains as some form of landslide.

"Typical landslides take place suddenly and are not readily mistaken," he explained. "Movements that are slow, especially in cases where the mass that is moving does not wholly separate itself from original surroundings, but slumps down more gradually, are more inexplicable. It is not the whole mountain that moves, but a portion of the mountainside.

How the Mountain Is Weakened.

"The commonest causes of movement of this kind are: First, undermining by streams, which gradually cut away the support of masses that lie on the mountainside; second, excessive soaking with water, as sometimes happens from a series of heavy rains. This serves to weaken or soften the support and allows the mass to slump or slide.

"Formations with much clay are particularly susceptible to this kind of action, and masses also that lie on comparatively steep slopes are more susceptible than others. The process is not very different in principle from the slides that took place in the Panama Canal in Culebra Cut.

"Geologists understand that many mountain masses have been moved considerably in the course of mountain-making, and it is only fair to admit that mountain-making has a right to continue in certain regions at the present time. Movements connected with mountain folding and faulting are recognized. These movements, however, are generally not to be confused with those referred to as 'moving mountains' or 'walking mountains.'"

Within the last hundred years there have been but these three accredited cases of moving mountains, it is said. In the case of the mountain at Meeker, an action which normally takes a thousand years or more took place within a few days.

The mountain at Domen Fawr, although not as active as the Meeker peak, has brought about more serious results by its shifts. The latest, which occurred a few weeks ago, shifted the river bed and made thirty families homeless. The people, warned that the mountain had been undermined by rains, appointed a watchman, who stood guard all night. Nothing happened until early morning, when with a mighty roar the river bed shifted to the main street. This took place on a Saturday. On the following Monday the mountain lurched once more, causing the river to rise still higher and leaving eighteen more homes flooded to the top floor. As further activities are feared, it is probable that many buildings in the imperiled district will be moved as soon as possible. A new school, built at a cost of $150,000 and seating more than a thousand pupils, is among the buildings endangered.

The City of Bellinzona, capital of the Swiss Canton of Ticino, is reported in danger of being blotted out by Mount Arbino, which moved three feet within two days. A mass about seven and a half miles wide and more than five thousand feet high was in motion, causing great fear among the townspeople. Although the movement is slow, it is nevertheless steadily approaching the town. Only a small granite mountain stands between Mount Arbino and Bellinzona.

BOY SCOUTS EAGER TO ENJOY THE WINTER CAMP ACTIVITIES

National Headquarters Has Worked Out Full List of Personal Equipment Required

BOY Scouts are looking forward with great eagerness to Winter camping. The local councils are working in collaboration with the camping department of the national organization, whose headquarters is in this city.

Winter camping is a development of recent years, and so popular has it grown that now practically every council possessing camping facilities places emphasis upon it. Kanohwahke Lake Camps at Bear Mountain Park afford ideal cold weather playgrounds for the Scouts, while a camp at Baiting Hollow, L. I., organized by the Suffolk County Scouts, has been made ready for use this year.

Scouts living in Boston have at their disposal three camps, all within easy distance of town and so available for week-end hikes. Rome, N. Y., has a camp, as has Buffalo. The latter's camp at Tode Hollow is famous throughout the Scout organization.

In the Southern States activities are to be extended, the Winter program including tree study, tracking in the woods and other pursuits adapted to the climate.

National headquarters has worked out a list of personal equipment designed to meet requirements for Winter camping. Every Scoutmaster is asked to make sure that boys have adequate clothing before permitting them to set forth. Campers are being instructed, too, in methods of giving aid to persons who have broken through ice-covered streams or ponds. Every Scout is urged to carry a guard rope while skating.

More than 14,000 boys were taught to swim in Scout camps last Summer, according to returns made to the Camping Department of the Boy Scouts of America.

The tenth anniversary of the Boy Scout movement in Akron, Ohio, was celebrated with a dinner on Nov. 11. The end of the decade finds 1,200 Boy Scouts in Akron, with 300 adults in the organization. During the ten years 5,300 boys have been Scouts.

ACADEMY FROWNS ON TERM "MATCH"

THE French Academy interdicts the word "match" as applied to athletics. Call them engagements, contests, tourneys, jousts, challenges, conflicts, what you will; the Academy, as the custodian of the French language, forbids such events to be known as "matches."

Yet as matches they are known by everybody in France, outside of the circle of the Immortals, and there are competent authorities who stoutly defend the word. Thus M. Jacques May writes:

"We have no equivalent for 'match.' Besides, it is useless to discuss it. The people are our sovereign masters in sporting terminology. The people say 'match' and we shall say 'match.'"

A STROMBERG-CARLSON RECEIVER does not confine its pleasures merely to the person to whom it is given.

A Stromberg-Carlson remains a living reminder of its donor to all who dwell within the charmed circle of its voice.

Always dependable, it is no passive plaything to be momentarily admired and then forgotten. It is ever alive, spontaneous, vibrant—with good cheer and good music.

And—to old and young—the doors of the world, of life itself, are opened every moment of the day, with a Stromberg-Carlson in the home. News of all that is most interesting is brought to your very hearthstone, often while the events are happening.

Year in and year out, the faithfulness of performance and reproduction of a Stromberg-Carlson is unique. It is the inevitable result of Stromberg-Carlson's unexcelled knowledge of the problems of voice transmission and voice reception, which has contributed to radio art: "Total Shielding," the Mighty Third Stage of Radio Frequency, "Universal" Receivers and other practices which are revolutionizing radio thought.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS GALORE FOR RADIO FANS THIS SEASON

Variety of Complete Sets for Homes Not Equipped—Many Useful Accessories for Receivers Already in Operation

A LETTER from a non-radio set owner during the past week asked a timely question: "I am just beginning to get interested in broadcasting, having heard a neighbor's set, which convinces me that radio has reached a stage where it reproduces music with excellent clarity. As I listened to his set it occurred to me that radio would be a fine Christmas gift in our home, which is still without the etherial entertainment. I find myself going next door to listen to the feature concerts, so I think it is time I bought a set. But there is such a variety of "duodynes and super-flexes" in the stores that I am puzzled as to which to buy. The one my friend has is too expensive for me, as it cost more than $300 and is in an elaborate cabinet, which I can get along without. The question is what set should I buy and how much must I pay to get a good instrument?"

Another letter said: "My nephew has a five-tube radio set, equipped with a horn loud-speaker, a storage battery and 'B' batteries, as he calls them. I know nothing about radio, so wonder if you could help me in selecting a Christmas gift for him that will improve his set."

A prominent radio engineer was asked to advise a friend relative to the purchase of a radio receiver and he said: "That is a most difficult assignment, because what is ideal for one is not ideal for another. Furthermore, there are many variable factors which govern the selection of a radio set, such as location, whether or not an indoor or outdoor antenna can be used, but the big factor is the pocketbook. Each individual must decide first of all how much he wants to spend and then look for a set at that price. Roughly, one might estimate that an expenditure upward of $125 must be made to assure a complete installation, which will tune sharply, give good tonal quality, operate easily and not require the attention of a service man every few days.

"A man buying a radio set should remember that no matter how fine a machine he purchases the results will be equivalent to cheap apparatus if he does not acquire an excellent loud-speaker, otherwise the tone will be distorted. Along this same line a power tube should be used in the last audio amplifier socket, as it will greatly improve the tone quality and increase volume.

"There are plenty of reliable receivers on the market today for the Christmas trade, but I would advise to 'shop early and avoid the rush.' In many cases this season there is likely to be a shortage of apparatus because manufacturers have learned from past experience that it is unwise to overproduce."

The person desirous of hanging a radio present on the Christmas tree will find gifts galore in the accessory field, which will improve the average receiver by minimizing distortion, eliminating interference, or by increasing the distance range of the equipment.

Many New Appliances.

Consider, for example, the owner of a five-tube outfit operated by "B" batteries, a storage "A" battery, and reproducing through a horn loud-speaker. There are ample new and useful appliances for this man. Perhaps he needs a new set of "B" batteries, or he might want a "B" eliminator, which dispenses with the dry cells and enables the use of the house lighting current as the source of supply.

A trickle charger would keep his storage battery constantly charged. A power tube in the last audio stage would improve the tonal quality and give slightly more volume. An extra "C" and "B" battery are required with such a tube, the voltage depending upon the type of power tube selected. There is also a new detector on the market which is designed especially for detection purposes, and it increases the distant range and volume of the signals. It requires no extra batteries or attachments. There are several audio filter devices which eliminate rattling noises caused by overloading the tubes. This accessory is inexpensive, generally costing less than $5. Audio output transformers are comparatively new, as they protect the loud-speaker from injury caused by excess current when power tubes are employed, thus improving reception. These instruments cost about $6. Several concerns have introduced a power switching relay for providing single switch control when light socket current supply devices are used or external super-power amplifiers. These instruments cost approximately $12.

Manufacturers of cone loud-speakers are rushing production and several concerns are working nights to meet the demand for this type of reproducer, which seems destined to be a popular gift during the holiday season. The cone devices vary in size and price from approximately a foot to thirty-six inches, and from $5 to $75. The average cone speaker will sell for about $30.

The "B" eliminators vary in size, some supplying 90 volts maximum and others 135 volts. They range in price from $25 to $60. There are also combination "B" eliminators and power amplifiers, which produce tremendous volume. These instruments are more costly than the average "B" eliminator and they usually sell for about $100, complete with rectifying tube and power amplifier, which is a more powerful tube than the ordinary power tube.

One concern has introduced a rechargeable "B" battery, which can be recharged to the full original voltage from six to eight times. It is recharged by the standard "B" battery charger or chemical rectifier.

For the boy interested in building his own set there are a number of complete kits of parts which he can assemble and in that way learn much about the technical side of broadcasting.

Radio books, especially those written within the past two years, make useful Christmas gifts, as they teach the set owner more about radio and help him to correct little faults in the receiving system which otherwise would require the attention of a service man.

There are undoubtedly many radio set owners who would be happy to receive a new set of tubes to replace the ones which have functioned in the circuit for a year or more.

"Birth of Morn," Leoni; "Last Night," Kjerulf; "Thank God for a Garden," Del Riego; "Song of the Open," La Forge; "Home, Sweet Home," Payne, Mme. Alda.

A four-act music drama, "Beethoven," based upon the dramatic and romantic life of t[illegible]e compos[illegible]r, will be the broadcast presented at 7:30 o'clock this evening over WGBS and WIP.

The program will be WGBS's part in the celebration of the Beethoven centenary, and comes at a time when musical groups throughout the country are presenting concerts in honor of Beethoven.

The musical drama "Beethoven" has been compiled and dramatized from biographies, letters and music of the composer.

Howard Kyle will enact Anton Schindler, Beethoven's dearest friend. The rôle of Beethoven will be portrayed by David Rosenthal. The musical background will consist of selections from Beethoven's works, including parts of his nine symphonies, played by Dr. Alfred G. Robyn and the WGBS string ensemble.

"What Has Become of the Stars of Yesterday?" will be the subject of a talk by Daniel Frohman, theatrical producer, tomorrow night at 8:50 o'clock from WEAF, WLIT and WSAI.

Under the direction of A. Winfield Hoeny, a presentation based upon a biblical incident will be offered the audience of WEAF at 10:15 o'clock tonight. The broadcast will be based upon the seizing [illegible] Naboth's vineyard by Ahab, the King of Samaria, which will give a dramatic example of the violation of the Tenth Commandment, which begins with the words "Thou shalt not covet."

The Gypsy String Ensemble will be heard broadcasting a series of popular and [illegible]mi-cl[illegible]sic numbers tomorrow night at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time. [illegible]ohn [illegible]es Wells, tenor, will be the soloist during this period. The program will radiate from WEAF, WEEI, WJAR, WLIT, WDAF, WCSH, WCAE, WTAM, WWJ and WSAI.

The historical episode to be presented to the audien[illegible] of WEAF and WTIC in the series, "Great Moments in History," on Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock will feature the Boston Tea Party.

A "Lincoln Program," based on Ida M. Tarbell's book "He Knew Lincoln," will be broadcast from WEAF and a chain of associated stations, Friday evening, Feb. 8, at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time.

"How the District Attorney's Office Operates" will be the subject of a talk by District Attorney Joab H. Banton, New York County, from WNYC tomorrow night at 9 o'clock.

Henry C. Murphy Jr., American painter on marine subjects, will talk on "Clipper Ships" from WGBS Tuesday night at 8:15 o'clock. His talk will be on the method of painting a ship picture, an explanation of how magazine covers are evolved from the artist's original and the history, technical and narrative, of sailing vessels and fishing schooners.

MEETING OF CONGRESS STARTS STAMPEDE FOR STATION LICENSES

THE introduction in Congress of measures which might cut off the free for all licensing of broadcasting stations on any old wave length apparently caused a panic on the part of prospective broadcasters throughout the country who began a mad scramble to get their applications into Washington before the lid is closed down. Chief Radio Supervisor W. D. Terrell was swamped with special delivery letters, telegrams and long-distance calls. Even so, many might be late if the resolution of Representative White prevails, for it provides that the licensing be cut off from Monday, Dec. 6.

Also quite a large majority of applicants may be out of it because their stations are not erected and ready for operation. The license they receive is not an erection permit but to begin broadcasting and before they are authorized to do this they must offer some evidence to show that the station exists and is ready for operation.

Before the wholesale issuance of licenses began, the Commerce Department sent a Federal supervisor to inspect the plant, but so many applications have been received that it became physically impossible for these supervisors to handle the work, and the Department now simply requires an affidavit from a city official, or a prominent citizen, setting forth the facts.

GERSHWIN ON THE AIR.

George Gershwin, composer, will be heard Tuesday night at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, broadcasting a number of his own selections, among them being "Rhapsody in Blue." He will be accompanied by an orchestra and will broadcast through WEAF, WEEI, WJAR, WTAG, WGR, WFI, WRC, WCAE, WTAM, WWJ, WGN, WSAI, WCCO, WQC and KSD.

WAXING AND WANING WHISTLE CAUSES LISTENERS TO COMPLAIN

Increasing Number of Broadcasters Creates More Disturbance and a Big Problem for For the Ether's Traffic Cops

THE annoyance in the ether described by broadcast listeners as "the whistle of a peanut stand" and by engineers as a "heterodyne whistle," continues to grow worse. This disturbance, which began in the lower conjested wave length bands, has gradually crept up to the higher waves, so that today even WEAF's 492-meter channel is not without a waxing and waning whistle, caused by another transmitter sending out a wave too close to the Broadway station's etherial pathway.

Letters from listeners show that in many cases they are discouraged with listening-in, even to the outstanding events mixed up with the cry of the "peanut stand." One radio fan said: "I have not tuned in since Bori sang several weeks ago. It was a crime to have such a recital spoiled by a whistle. I have disconnected the batteries and when the ether is clear I will resume listening in, as I enjoy it and get many hours of pleasure from radio, but it is no joy to have a whistle meet you at every turn of the dial."

A radio enthusiast in Brooklyn said: "While I do not for a moment minimize the importance to the nation and to the people of great questions before Congress, I would like to say that not one of all the other matters calling for attention comes as close to as many men, women and children as does the present radio situation.

"The ultimate effects of some measures before Congress probably will be more profound and reach larger numbers, but not one of them touches the people as intimately at present and not one of them is meant to ameliorate conditions that rouse daily as much anger, profanity and grouch as does the existing broadcasting situation. It certainly merits active attention."

If Congress passes new radio laws giving the Federal Radio Supervisors authority to act, these traffic cops of the ether will be busy men straightening out the broadcasting system which has run wild for almost six months. The ether today is like a garden which has had no attention for half a year. The weeds are mixed in with the flowers as the whistles are mingled with the music.

When the ruling of the Department of Justice took the ether's police off their beats last July there were about 560 stations on the air. Today there are 621. And in July the warning was broadcast by the officials of the Department of Commerce that all available space in the ether was occupied. But the officers have had no power to act under the wireless laws of 1912, with the result that "no parking" signs have been violated, and today more than fifteen stations are "parked" on a single channel, whereas only one or two transmitters should be there. Some waves are carrying the programs of ten or a dozen stations, and naturally they interact to produce the beat note or whistles. They are all jammed together on one busy etherial street.

It will be a big job to get the system operating smoothly again, no matter what radio control legislation Congress enacts.

Coolidge Favors White Bill.

President Coolidge, endorsing the House bill, has gone on record as strongly against the creation of any more independent commissions. Whether he would go so far as to veto an independent commission bill is not known.

Likewise, Secretary Hoover, although repeatedly disclaiming any desire to again have radio control lodged in his department, has also opposed an independent commission. General James G. Harbord, President of the Radio Corporation of America, has characterized commissions as "an agency which so efficiently lends itself to evasion and sidestepping of responsibility."

Congressman John Q. Tilson of Connecticut, House floor leader, has endorsed the White bill. Nicholas Longworth, Speaker of the House of Representatives, has not endorsed either bill, but has taken notice of the confusion which he said he found in the air, and expressed the hope that the differences of the conferees would be immediately adjusted and a good law passed.

Finally the National Radio Coordinating Committee, which claims to represent the broadcasters, manufacturers, amateurs and, as much as anything probably, the listening public, in effect has endorsed the House bill by recommending that there be a commission whose rulings should be administered by the Department of Commerce.

It has been repeatedly said by individual members of the conference committee that if they are able to reconcile the one big difference as to whether radio shall be controlled by an independent commission, or through an established Government department, there is no question but that other matters could be ironed out and a radio law forthcoming in short order.

500,000 HAVE ENROLLED IN RADIO FARM SCHOOL

THE outstanding development of the radio market news service during the year, according to Secretary W. A. Jardine, is the extension of a leased wire to Station KFKX, at Hastings, Neb. This powerful station will carry marketing information to the Great Plains States, into many sections not heretofore reached by the Government service.

Congress provided for extensions of leased-wire service through the agricultural college at Ames, where reports are broadcast by the college station. A "drop" has been opened at Oklahoma City, where, through cooperation with the State Board of Agriculture, reports are broadcast for the Southwest. With the development of more college and university radio stations additional contacts have been made for the use of market material. Marketing information is now being used by stations at Ohio State University, Columbus; Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.; and the South Dakota station at Brookings.

Estimating that the number of rural radio sets in the United States now reached over a million, Secretary Jardine said that over half a million enrolment cards had already been received by the United States Farm Radio School. "Radio schoolmasters" at different stations conduct classes. He added that ninety broadcasting stations, representing every section of the country, lend their facilities regularly for an average of half an hour daily to the newly established agricultural radio service.

"S O S" APPEALS SENT BY BRITISH STATIONS

THE number of "S O S" calls radiated by the British broadcasting stations continues to increase, according to reports from London. More than half of the "S O S" appeals are requests for people to go to the bedsides of dying relatives or friends. Strict regulations concern such messages, which are only broadcast in cases where there is indisputable evidence that it is a matter of the gravest urgency. In most cases a medical certificate is required, and in every instance there must be verification of the facts.

A recent illustration of the use of the "S O S" message was afforded by an ex-soldier, who, seriously ill in a sanatorium, sought news of a nurse he met in Saloniki seven years ago. There were several answers to this appeal, and one from a nurse in Glasgow is believed to be the one desired. It is stated that the man in question required the evidence of this nurse to secure for him an Army pension in the event of his recovery.

Every "S O S" sent out is followed up, and an endeavor made to discover whether or not it was successful, the results being carefully charted. So far this year 197 messages have achieved the desired result.

MOBILE BEACONS DESIGNED TO REPLACE FOGHORNS

Tests are being made in San Francisco Bay of a mobile radio beacon installed in the pilot house of a ship which transmits a characteristic sound over a short distance. Invented by Dr. Frederick A. Koister, the beacon is for the purpose of preventing ships from colliding in fogs. As ships approach one another they may hear the beacon and determine its direction by means of a radio compass. If successful, these silent warnings will displace the old-fashioned foghorns, which so sadly fray the passengers' nerves.

THE FAMOUS PARAGON BLIND TEST
that radio would bring to the blind, the New York Herald-Tribune raised, through popular subscription, a large fund with which to supply these worthy people with radio receivers.
To administer this fund, they appointed the American Foundation for the Blind. A committee of five prominent men, each assisted by a technical radio adviser, investigated and tested, over a period of more than two months, twenty of the best known makes of receivers. As a result of these tests, PARAGON was the unanimous choice of this committee and the American Foundation for the Blind.
Of the many radical tests made, the most striking was the operation of six leading makes of receivers in the presence of ten blind people. This audience, without knowing one receiver from the other except by a number, without exception chose PARAGON.

PARAGON HISTORY
The first regenerative receiver—PARAGON—was manufactured.
1916
PARAGON effected the first transcontinental reception (not prearranged) from New York to California.
1917-18
PARAGON receivers, due to greater sensitivity and selectivity, proved superior to all others in interception of enemy signals by the U. S. Army and Navy.
1923
With a PARAGON receiver Canadian Amateur Relay Station 9-BP, at Prince Rupert, British Columbia, maintained unbroken two-way radio communication with Donald McMillan's Arctic ship, the "Bowdoin," frozen in—in Northern Greenland—2,200 miles away. After a period of several weeks, during which no station had been able to receive the slightest signal from the Bowdoin, the first to bring in a message from the expedition was the PARAGON receiver.
1927

1. The extreme simplicity of the tuning operation.
2. The pure and natural tones.
3. The wonderful selectivity.
4. The acute sensitiveness and ease of long distance reception.
5. The freedom from body capacity effects.
6. Only necessary to record ONE DIAL setting, for exact locating of stations.
7. Most attractive pieces of furniture available.
8. CAN BE BOUGHT ON EASY CONVENIENT TERMS TO SUIT YOUR PURSE.
9. PACKED IN ORIGINAL FACTORY CARTONS.
10. TWO GUARANTEES: Manufacturer's and Brooklyn Radio's.

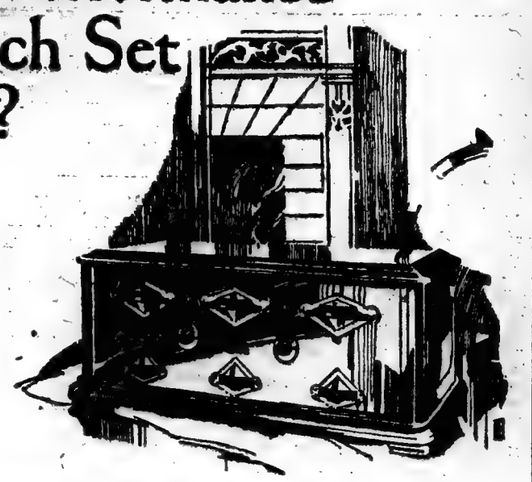
Will Price or Performance Decide Which Set You'll Buy?

You get exactly what you pay for. Performance, which gives true radio satisfaction, is not on the bargain counter. If performance guide you, you will have no regrets.



COMPARE Grebe reception with that of other sets; and don't buy until you do! Note the tone quality, the range, the selectivity, the ease with which low-wave stations are separated and tuned, the volume of distant as well as local stations.

There are very definite reasons why the Synchrophase excels in all these respects — exclusive Grebe developments, four of which are illustrated below.

In addition, with the Grebe Flexible Unit Control you have a one, two, or three-dial controlled set at will; the Dial Light makes the tuning dial visible in dark corners; the Protective Fuse protects B batteries against defective tubes.

And back of it all is the Grebe name, standard of quality for over seventeen years.

Ask a Grebe dealer to demonstrate the Synchrophase and explain the reasons for the unusual reception it gives.

WILBUR IN REPORT REVIEWS NAVY'S RADIO DEVELOPMENTS

Special Emphasis Placed Upon Short Waves and Equipment for Aircraft—Naval Stations Handled 14,362,989 Words This Year

MODERN radio apparatus in considerable quantity is needed by the fleet, according to Secretary of the Navy Curtis D. Wilbur. The necessity for avoiding interference with the public's broadcasting program requires the replacement of that part of the navy equipment which uses the wave lengths employed in broadcasting. The efforts of the department have been concentrated on the development of radio equipment which is capable of meeting the present and future requirements of strategy, tactics, fire control and navigation.

"The navy has maintained, as always, an advanced position in the radio world. The development of short-wave apparatus which gives increased range of communication with lower initial cost and with greatly reduced cost of operation has continued, and the Naval Research Laboratory's accomplishments in this field have been unequaled," said Secretary Wilbur.

"Special emphasis continues to be given to the development of radio apparatus suitable for aircraft where weight is of prime importance. The exacting requirements as to range, reliability and ruggedness make this a very difficult and specialized problem, and many hours are being spent in flight tests and experiments. For the submarine branch of the service work in development of improved communication facilities between submerged submarines or a submerged submarine and surface vessel has continued with encouraging results.

"It is hoped the extensive weather service for aircraft in flight in the New York-Washington-Norfolk areas will be the forerunner of a complete system along the coast of the United States and throughout its outlying possessions. The technical work done on aircraft radio is of importance not only to the navy but to commercial interests as well, for the growing interest in air transport is giving to radio communication and radio direction finding for aircraft a constantly increasing significance.

"Preparation has been made for rendering the navy's radio compass stations available for the guidance of aircraft. It is considered that great progress has been made in aircraft communications during the year.

"Photographic records have been obtained showing the difference in time required for a radio wave to travel between two points, directly and by reflection from the Kennelly-Heaviside layer, thus giving a further check on the actual height of this layer above the earth.

"The transmission of standard radio frequencies for the checking of naval radio transmissions has afforded amateur radio stations a welcome opportunity of calibrating their frequency meters and receivers. The endeavor to obtain apparatus suitable for use in naval radio has resulted in a higher grade product being supplied by the navy, frequently at greatly reduced cost. Manufacturers, taking advantage of information supplied, have been able to produce a better article and thus raise the standard of American radio apparatus with benefit to all commercial users," said Secretary Wilbur.

"There being no commercial source of supply of quartz oscillators available at present which meet the exacting broadcasting requirements, the Naval Research Laboratory is supplying the needs of several other governmental departments for this rare article. It is learned that the radio intelligence system ashore now comprises no less than 133 stations, including those for direct communication with the fleet, coastal stations for marine traffic, having a range of 300 miles, aircraft stations, harbor stations for short-distance work up to 50 miles and radio compass stations.

"During the year the navy handled 14,362,987 words, of which about half were for other departments of the Government. In this connection, the application of high radio frequencies to the problem of naval communication has progressed materially, and the growth of the use of high frequency by the shore radio stations has been extremely satisfactory."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By ORRIN E. DUNLAP Jr.

QUESTION—Kindly tell me if there is any department in Washington to which I could complain in regard to amateur wireless operators who are using sending outfits on the air all hours of the day and night, affecting hundreds of broadcast receivers? This disturbance has been going on in Oswago for some time. One minute a program may come in fine, only to be blotted out with a loud roar. Who is in charge of radio activities in this district?—W. A. S. Answer—The Department of Commerce is in charge of amateur radio. The Federal Radio Supervisor, Federal Building, Detroit, Mich., is in direct charge of the amateurs in your district. Amateur interference would be in the form of dots and dashes. The fact that you describe the interference as a roar seems to indicate that some electrical device or faulty power line in the section may be responsible for the annoyance and not the amateur operators, who transmit on wave lengths below the tuning range of the average broadcast receiver.

Question—Will an aerial pointing east and west serve better for picking up far western stations than one pointing north and south, or is there no difference between them?—H. C. R. Answer—If you wish to favor reception from the west point the wire east and west and take the lead-in off the western end of the antenna.

Question—Can either the R. C. A. or the Cunningham new power detector and amplifying tubes be used successfully with a five-tube neutrodyne set? (2) If they are suitable for my set, is one make any better than the other? (3) You state in one case the power amplifying tube should be inserted in the last amplifying audio stage and gives clearer reception. Would two give still better results? (4) Can the amplifying audio tubes be used without putting in power detector tube? (5) In installing my set three years ago, when the "C" battery was connected according to directions, we could get no results, viz., no reception, so it was never used. Can you suggest any reason for this difficulty and the remedy? (6) What is the benefit from using a "C" battery? (7) I understand from your reply to another that in putting in the new detector tube the wiring for "A" battery as recommended for the Cunningham tubes used up to this time, which I believe are 201-A, will have to be changed. (8) What is the minimum "A," "B" and "C" battery power required with this set with one new detector tube and one power tube?—R. E. M. Answer—Yes, either. (2) The results will be equal with either make. (3) No; the tube is designed for the last audio stage. (4) Yes. (5) The battery was undoubtedly connected wrong. (6) Less distortion and reduces the drain on the "B" battery, thereby lengthening the life of the batteries. If you send to the manufacturer of your set you can probably obtain a diagram of the correct connections for the "C" battery in your set. (7) The "A" battery connections to the detector should be reversed when the new tube is used. (8) "A" battery 6 volts; "B" battery 135 volts; "C" battery will depend upon the power tube selected. For example, the CX-112 requires a 9-volt "C" and the CX-171 requires 22½-volt "C."

Question—I have a two-tube regenerative set and an outdoor antenna. I can receive stations up to about 380 meters, but above that I hear scarcely anything except WJZ, WJR and WLW. These stations are not received as satisfactorily as those below 380 meters. One night I heard KOA, Denver, on 322 meters, but I can scarcely discern WJZ. Do you think that reducing the length of the aerial will help?—J. P. N. Answer—There is not sufficient wire on the tuner or the antenna is too short. Add about twenty-five feet of wire to the antenna and the higher waves will be heard.

Question—I have a condition in my receiving set that needs expert diagnosis. Below 448 meters all reception is mushy and we can understand speaking hardly at all, while above 448 meters the reception is as clear and undistorted as can be desired. This condition has existed for a period of probably three months. Reception is not always distorted on the low wave lengths, but is so a majority of the time. I have tested the circuit, all batteries, tubes and transformers and can find nothing wrong. The circuit is the Haynes-Griffin superheterodyne of 1924, seven tubes, with a power tube added. This set has been most satisfactory until recently.—H. J. T. Answer—The trouble is caused by the congested condition of the ether and until the stations are separated the condition will exist.

Question—Please give me the definition of a superheterodyne.—J. D. A. Answer—Superheterodyne reception is a method of receiving in which the incoming current is combined with the current from a local oscillator and converted into current of an intermediate frequency which is then amplified and detected to reproduce the original signal wave.

Question—I have a six-tube tuned radio frequency thermiodyne radio set. No provision is made in the set for the use of a "C" battery. In order to improve the quality I desire to install a power tube, but since the circuit is sealed I do not see how I can make the necessary changes in the wiring to permit the use of a "C" battery. I have seen advertised a piece of apparatus known as an adapter, which it is claimed will permit the use of a power tube and a "C" battery without any rewiring of the set. Would this piece of apparatus work in my case?—L. J. K. Answer—The adapter is equipped with four contacts for the extra "C" and "B" battery connections. It will put the "C" battery on the power tube, but not on the other audio amplifier.

Question—Is there a station CYJ in Mexico City just above the wave length of WOR, perhaps about 411 meters? I heard this station sign off with an announcement in Mexican and distinctly in American the announcer said "General Electric Company, Mexico City."—K. L. R. Answer—There have been several reports similar to this during the past week; however, the General Electric Company reports that it does not operate a station in Mexico City. There is no call CYJ listed as a Mexican station.

Question—We have a Radiola superheterodyne No. 28 and a neighbor insists that the set sends out interfering noises which disturb his machine. The dealer who sold the superheterodyne said that it was not the type of circuit which would cause squeals. Is he right?—C. J. Answer—Engineers of the Radio Corporation of America, manufacturers of the superheterodyne, contend that it will not radiate or act as a miniature transmitter, which creates howls.

REMEMBER
The 100 Neediest Cases.

WSM SIGNS OFF UNTIL JANUARY

STATION WSM, Nashville, Tenn., has signed off for about a month. The entire equipment will be removed and replaced by a new 5,000-watt Western Electric installation which will go on the air some time about the middle of next month.

The new vacuum tube transmitter will be of the latest design and will be the third of its type to be installed in the United States. The other installations are at WAHG and WPG.

It is expected that the station will continue to operate on the 282.8-meter wave length.

DAMROSCH RECITAL.

Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra, has selected the first two acts of "Götterdämmerung" as his piano-recital presentation Saturday night at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time.

The program will be heard through WEAF, WEEI, WGR, WWJ, WTAM, WFI, WSAI, WOC WCCO, WDAF, WCAE, WGN and KSD.

ENGINEERS TO MEET.

The Institute of Radio Engineers will hold a convention on Jan. 10, 11 and 12, at the Engineering Societies Building, 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, New York.

The use of copper tubing in short wave transmitting aerials makes it fairly simple for the broadcast station operator to vary the wave length in an emergency. At KDKA, Pittsburgh, the wave length may be varied by inserting a copper rod in the tubing of the horizontal counterpoise. The variation depends on the distance the rod is pushed in.

TECHNIQUE USED IN PREPARING RURAL LISTENERS' PROGRAMS

Department of Agriculture Survey Shows Noon Hour Is Best Time to Send Broadcasts to the Farmers

THE technique of preparing material for radio broadcasting is one of the fine points in winning and holding the appreciation of radio audiences, according to Sam Pickard, chief of the radio service, United States Department of Agriculture.

"Certain rules must be observed by the radio writers in preparing the material for the department's twenty-two educational programs," said Mr. Pickard. "That they are well received is evidenced by the thousands of letters and telegrams received daily from listeners in every section of the country.

"The subject matter must have 'teeth' in it—real punch in the form of fresh, new, helpful information. The program maker dare not bore his audience with restatement of old facts. He must sense the questions his audience may be asking, and without waste of words or attempt at oratory.

"Information must be clearly and interestingly presented. Every fact must be dramatized to the fullest extent—be prepared with a friendly tone and ring true when spoken. All scientific terms and words are eliminated.

"The radio program maker edits both with his ears and his eyes to determine whether the copy 'speaks smoothly.' He reads it aloud to test its 'ear quality,' for words and sentences easily read may sound awkward when spoken. Difficult consonants are avoided. Construction is simplified. It is the listener's ear, not his eye, that must be made to register. He must be made to feel that he is being 'talked to' or 'visited with,' rather than 'lectured at.' There must be dignity in the program. Cleverness must be genuine.

"But all these efforts are of no avail," concludes Mr. Pickard, "unless the voice at the microphone is pleasant, friendly and effective. The microphone artist must show genuine interest in his audience and in his subject matter."

Commenting further on educational programs, he says the best time of day for such features is a matter on which opinions differ. The Department of Agriculture prefers the noon hour, preferably 12:30 to 1, for farm programs. Second best time is the early evening—from 6:30 to 7:30. The later evening hours, he believes, should be reserved for music. Evening is the time for folks to enjoy entertainment and forget working day problems.

NETWORK PLANNED FOR PACIFIC COAST

Advices from San Francisco are that a 1,000-watt broadcasting station is to be constructed there by Vincent J. Kraft of Station KJR, at Seattle. Likewise, that the San Francisco station will be another unit in a chain of high-powered stations contemplated for Seattle, Portland, Spokane, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

AMATEURS COLLECT DATA ON SHORT WAVE LENGTHS

Reception of New England Stations in New York Not as Consistent as Tuning in the Waves of Australia

THE direction which short waves travel plays an important part in the distance the signals cover, according to observations made at amateur station 2NZ, New Jersey, cooperating with other stations using an input of approximately 300 watts. It was found that when working with less than 300 watts the results obtained were too erratic to be used as a basis of deduction.

The tests revealed that a station which is clearly audible at a certain distance to the north may be inaudible at the same distance from the west. An hour later this condition may be exactly reversed. For example, it has been found that the short-wave signals of Greenland expeditions have been heard more consistently in the Western and Middle Western sections of the United States than in the Eastern part of the country. This was the case on the Greenland expedition last Summer, yet messages transmitted from New York daily were copied by the operator aboard the Effie Morrissey, the expedition's schooner. On the Byrd polar expedition, however, the radio signals from the S. S. Chantier were heard best in the Eastern part of the country, and stations in the East were also heard most clearly by the Chantier's operator.

Conditions in New England.

Another peculiar case of geographical limitations in short-wave radio transmission is New England. It is well known among New York radio amateurs that New England is seldom heard on 40 meters or lower at night; in fact, stations more than fifty miles north of New York are seldom heard after 8 P. M. on this wave length. In the few instances when they do come through they are barely audible. This is one instance of the "skipped distance" theory, which has proved consistent, regardless of weather conditions. However, this theory has not proved consistent in any other direction from New York. Stations to the south, for instance, can be heard at varying distances, although they are irregular, depending largely on the weather. Signals from stations to the west are even more erratic, and amateurs can never tell how they will come in until night arrives.

Weather variations, however, will quickly change the geographical limitations of short-wave radio transmission. Ordinarily, for example, amateur stations in Florida are seldom heard in New York after dark. Yet during the recent Florida disaster practically the only stations which could be heard in New York were those in Florida and near-by States. This was a particularly fortunate coincidence, in view of the fact that the land telegraph and telephone wires were down, and only through radio amateurs was the rest of the country able to get the news of the storm. Strange to relate, the Putnam Greenland expedition also reported on their return that the only stations they could hear at the time of the Florida storm were the amateurs from that locality and a few from California.

With reference to weather conditions, it has been found that short-wave radio differs from transmission at 200 meters and above. A clear, cold night is usually excellent for music broadcast reception, yet such weather is often bad for amateur reception. Many an amateur has risen from his warm bed in the wee small hours of the morning only to find that the clear, sparkling night brought him in nothing below 50 meters but a few locals.

Fog Aids Transmission.

On the other hand, very often foggy or drizzly nights prove to be the best sort of radio weather. The operator at 2NZ was "listening in" about 3:30 A. M. recently and the air was "dead." Not a radio transmitter could be heard. A little later a rainstorm beat against the windows, and at the same moment the New England stations began to come in very loud, in spite of the fact that stations from that section are not usually heard at night in New York. The rain lasted for a few minutes and so did the reception from New England.

Some nights the signals come in sharp and clear. At other times the signals from the same stations come in with a moaning, hollow sound as though from great distances. At times it is actually uncanny to listen to them; they sound like the voices of lost spirits trying to force their way through the ether. These weird signals are a sign of poor radio weather, and much difficulty is generally experienced at such times in short-wave communication and in working distant stations.

In at least 80 per cent. of the cases good reception on low-wave lengths seems to be a one-way affair. For instance, when a New York station talks with a California station, if the former reports the latter's signals as very strong, generally the other station reports the signals received as weak, or vice versa. Often it is possible for New York operators clearly to hear Pacific Coast stations without being able to make themselves heard in return.

The phenomena mentioned are almost the rule when working with Brazil, as it is seldom that Brazil reports a strong signal at the same time as New York stations receive good signals from that country. On the other hand, Australia and New Zealand give United States stations consistent reports of nearly the same signal strength day in and day out, and their stations heard here seem to be quite as consistent. In fact, there is less variation in the strength of signals received here from New Zealand than there is in signals received from the Middle West.

Signals Fade Without Warning.

Signals from some parts of the country, and of the world, have a tendency to fade out without warning, while from other sections they seldom fade in this way. Distance does not seem to affect this fading, because, as mentioned above, Australia and New Zealand stations are among the most consistent heard in New York, while the near-by Middle West often fades. For instance, one night a New York operator succeeded in establishing communication with a station owned by a friend near Waterloo, Iowa. The call was answered by the brother of the person wanted, but by the time the latter reached the transmitter the signals had become very weak, and they died out before the message could be received. It was not possible to get this station again that night.

Observers say that if it were possible to formulate definite rules for short-wave radio they would apply only to the particular wave lengths for which they were developed. For instance, there are great differences between radio transmission on 40 meters and transmission on 20 meters. This was clearly proved by the radio reception from the S. S. Chantier, Lieut. Commander Byrd's polar expedition ship, on their trip to Spitzbergen.

On the outward trip of the S. S. Chantier the first communication on 20 meters was held when they were at a distance of about 500 miles from New York. Good communication was maintained until they reached a distance of some 2,000 miles, all communication on this wave length being during the daytime, as several attempts proved it impossible to communicate on this wave length at night. After the ship was more than 2,000 miles out of New York she was heard only once on the twenty-meter wave length, and that very faintly, although the boat was only 2,300 or 2,400 miles away. The best results on the 20 meters were secured during the late afternoons, the signals dying out around 5 in the afternoon.

At night the forty-meter wave length was used very successfully, and it is quite interesting to note that there was no "skipped" distance at short distances. On her return trip the S. S. Chantier was worked consistently every night, and as she drew closer her signals became louder in proportion to the distance. The absence of "skipped" distance may perhaps be explained by the fact that the transmission was entirely over water.

As the amount of power used in a short-wave transmitter is decreased the results become even less consistent. The stories told of communicating with Australia or other distant points with a receiving tube using one or two watts are usually true, but such radio transmission requires a great deal of work and much waiting for the right night to come along. For very short distances low power is consistent, but as the distance increases the chances for daily communication lessen, until the amateur operator has about as much chance of getting "distance" as the average New Yorker has of getting a California broadcasting station on his radio set—it has been known to happen.

DENIES WIRED WIRELESS SYSTEM IS PLANNED

ALTHOUGH numerous reports to the contrary have again been in circulation, the idea that a national extension of radio programs over telephone wires and into the homes through the loud speaker telephone attachments has been denied by an official of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, who writes:

"It is the same old rumor, and as far as I know, no attempt has been made on the part of our people to go into such a service. As you are doubtless aware, at several points throughout the country attempts have been made along these lines by picking up radio programs and distributing them by wire, but in no case has the American Telephone and Telegraph Company or its associates furnished such a service."

Helen Stanley, Soprano, at WAHG, Friday Evening.

FOUR NEW STATIONS EXTEND TOTAL TO 621

THE Detroit Police Department, whose old station was famous for its designation KOP, has again been licensed to broadcast, using the call WWPR. Four stations were authorized to go on the air this week as follows, bringing the total number up to 621; WWPR, Detroit Police Department, Detroit, Mich., 300 meters; KGDO, C. H. and Henry Garrett, Dallas Texas, 285 meters; KXL, KXL Broadcasters, Portland, Ore., 400 meters, and WLCI, Lutheran Association of Ithaca, N. Y., Ithaca, N. Y., 266 meters.

Other changes reported are: WHFC, Triangle Broadcasters, Chicago, Ill., name changed from Hotel Flanders; KFVR, the Clinger Corporation Broadcasting, Denver, Col., name changed from Moonlight Ranch Broadcasting Company; WFCI, Frank Crook, Inc., Pawtucket, R. I., wave length changed from 229 meters to 258.5 meters; KWTC, Dr. John Wesley Hancock, Santa Ana, Cal., wave length changed from 260.7 meters to 263 meters; KRLD, Dallas Radio Laboratories, Inc., Dallas, Texas, wave length changed from 357.1 to 353 meters, and KSBA, W. G. Patterson, Shreveport, La., location changed from Kennonwood, La., wave length changed from 312.6 to 260.7 meters.

Station WEBZ, Savannah Radio Corporation, Savannah, Ga., has discontinued broadcasting.

TRAPPING WAVES.

The reception of time signals from the Government radio station at Arlington for rebroadcast on KDKA's 309-meter wave entails an elaborate trapping and shielding system. The receiving set is located about 100 feet from the transmitting station and two sets of antennae—long and short waves. In order to tune in station NAA, Arlington, a wavetrap for each wave band is installed before the receiving set. Outside wires are sheathed in lead cable; the apparatus is shielded by metallic screens. A covered cable carries the signals to KDKA's transmitter.

FIFTEEN TYPES OF TUBES AID TO IMPROVE RECEPTION

Special Detectors and Amplifiers to Be Found in The Christmas Market This Season Useful In All Receivers

THOSE in search of Christmas gifts in the vacuum tube field will find a variety of detectors and amplifiers.

With advent of the new and improved detector tube, Type CX-300A, or its equivalent, and the successful development of the power tube, one manufacturer now has fifteen distinct types of radio tubes on the market. Progress in this specialized branch of the radio industry is an indication of the rapid advance made this year.

In 1915 there was only one type of radio tube on the market. By 1920 there were only two types. The early tube was designed to serve in every socket of all standard radio equipment; and, considering the variety of tasks that it had to perform, was remarkably efficient.

Radio owners, however, as well as radio engineers, were not satisfied. There was a constant demand in those pioneer days of radio for better tone quality, increased sensitiveness and greater amplification. This demand led to the development of special types of tubes designed to perform particular tasks with scientific accuracy.

Four Types of Tubes.

Radio tubes today may be divided into four general classifications: detector, voltage amplifier, power amplifier and rectifier tubes. Within these classes some tubes are constructed to serve in storage battery operated sets, others to be used in dry cell operated receivers and still others for use in connection with socket power devices, including "B" eliminators.

Type CX-300A is a new special purpose tube designed for use only in the detector socket of receivers using five-volt tubes. This new detector will give a receiver clearer and sweeter tone and increase volume on far-away stations. Installation is merely a matter of taking out the old tube and slipping the new tube in its place.

Type CX-301A is a general purpose tube for storage battery sets and one of the most popular tubes in use today. It gives amplification at either audio or radio frequency.

Type CX-112 may be used in place of CX-301A in the last audio stage without change in voltages. CX-112 is a power tube and, feeding the loudspeaker, improves tone quality and gives increased volume. CX-371 is a power amplifier tube designed for the last audio stage. While this tube is more difficult to install than the CX-112 in receivers where provision has not been made for it, the task is not difficult for a technical man. CX-371 practically eliminates all possibility of signal distortion and improves the operation of any loud-speaker.

Dry Cell Tubes.

C-299 and CX-299 are general purpost high vacuum tubes especially designed for extreme economy of operation from dry cells. The tubes are identical except for their bases. C-299 has a special type small bayonet lock base while the CX-299 is mounted on the standard CX base. The former type is manufactured principally for replacement purposes, since new sets are designed for the standard push type base. CX-220 is a high vacuum tube designed for dry battery operation as a power amplifier to supplement C and CX-299. It is used only in the last audio stage to feed the loudspeaker with maximum undistorted power.

Types C-11 and CX-12, like C-299 and CX-299, are identical except for their bases. Both of these tubes are excellent detectors and audio frequency amplifiers for dry cell operated sets.

CX-313 is a full wave rectifier tube and CX-316B is a single wave rectifier of high power. These tubes are for use with socket power devices, including "B" eliminators. CX-374 and C-376 are also tubes for special work in connection with operating receivers directly from the house lighting circuit.

CX-310 is a heavy duty power amplifier tube designed especially to operate heavy duty loud-speakers. C-377 is a protective tube which, when connected in the "B" battery circuit, will protect radio tube filaments against any possibility of accidental burn-out through wrong "B" battery connection or short circuits.

There are more tube manufacturers this year than last season. In most cases each manufacturer has a tube equivalent with the numbers mentioned in this article. The difference in the tubes in several cases is only in the letter prefix, as the numbers remain the same. For example, there is the CX-112 and a UX-112. Both are power tubes. Another designer designates his tubes with the "DV" and "DL" prefixes, with the tubes designed to function in various sockets, just as the CX or UX line.

FEDERATION OF LABOR DEDICATES NEW STATION

STATION WCFL, located on the Municipal Pier, Chicago, and owned by the Chicago Federation of Labor, was officially opened last night by Mayor William E. Dever. A special program was presented which carried the broadcasting through until 2 o'clock this morning.

The station has been broadcasting since midsummer, but the officials postponed the formal opening until last night.

This station maintains a radiogram service and is forwarding messages to Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Columbus, Duluth and other cities. Connections will be made with Indianapolis and Washington in the near future, according to reports from Chicago.

From coast to coast—they say the same

YES, we were too modest about the new Fada 8. Read these three unsolicited letters out of the scores that pour in every day.

"The Fada (8 tube) is better than you claim for it . . . excels in tone volume, selectivity and distance. And whether it is in full blast or tuned down to a whisper the tone remains perfect . . . logged 93 stations in two nights and heard many more . . .

. . . An accomplishment to obtain these stations between the two giants, WJZ and WEAF . . . cannot exaggerate my enthusiasm."

"Wonderful success . . . first two nights sixty stations logged . . . Seattle, Spokane and Portland with good speaker volume on only seven tubes . . . every one that heard it said . . . 'The last word in Radio.'"

We got 78 different stations in United States, Canada and Mexico . . . KYW in Chicago came in with great volume . . . after having several different makes in past four years . . . have found the one which has no comparison for selectivity and tone qualities.

The Gift of Lasting Delight

PERFECT radio and fine furniture—there is no more acceptable gift for Christmas than one of the new Bosch Radio Receivers. They are Armored and Shielded against interferences—and what is equally important very, very easily tuned.

The seven tube Amborada is controlled by a single station selector to the keenest selectivity. The illuminated dial allows tuning even in a dark corner. This Bosch precision built receiver is beautiful in exterior design, a handsome piece of furniture. All batteries, charger and power units are hidden from sight. The five tube Cruiser is also a perfected receiver having the Unified Control—one dial for most tuning, dual dial tuning for "Cruising the Air."

Visit the Bosch Dealer and let him show you the superiority of Bosch Radio, also the New Bosch Nobattry "B" Power Unit, the safe, silent, mistake-proof lighting socket attachment.

Make your radio set a light socket receiver with Balkite "B" and the new Balkite Trickle and High-Rate Charger

Balkite Trickle Charger $10
With 6-volt "A" batteries can be left on continuous or trickle charge thus automatically keeping the battery at full power. With 4-volt batteries can be used as an intermittent charger. Or as a trickle charger if a resistance is added. Charging rate about .5 ampere. Over 300,000 in use. Price $10.

Balkite Combination
Supplies automatic power to both "A" and "B" circuits. Controlled by the filament switch on your set. Entirely automatic in operation. Serves any set now using either 4 or 6-volt "A" batteries and requiring not more than 30 milliamperes at 135 volts of "B" current—practically all sets of up to 8 tubes. Price $59.50.

All Balkite Radio Power Units operate from 110-120 volts AC current with models for both 60 and 50 cycles. The new Balkite Charger is also made in a special model for 25-40 cycles.

To enjoy the convenience of operating your radio set from the light socket add the new Balkite "B" and the new Balkite Charger.

Balkite "B"—the proved "B" power supply—eliminates "B" batteries entirely and supplies "B" current from the light socket. The new Balkite "B"-W at $27.50 serves any set of 5 tubes or less requiring 67 to 90 volts; Balkite "B"-X at $42 serves of up to 135 volts and 8 tubes (illustrated); Balkite "B"-Y at $69 any standard set. Most owners of even small sets will buy Balkite "B"-X which will take care of nearly any set you buy in the future.

The new Balkite Charger at $19.50, with both high and low charging rates, is easily the greatest charger value in radio. It combines the advantages of both trickle and rapid charging. At the low rate, on trickle charge, it automatically keeps your "A" battery fully charged, and in effect converts it into a light socket "A" power supply. Its high rate provides an ample reserve of power for the largest sets.

Both Balkite "B" and the Balkite Charger are entirely noiseless in operation. Both are permanent pieces of equipment, with no bulbs and nothing to wear out or replace. Other than a slight consumption of household current, their first cost is the last. Both are built to conform with the standards of the Underwriters' Laboratories.

Over 650,000 radio sets are already Balkite-equipped. Add these two Balkite Units to your receiver now. Then you too will know the pleasure of owning a radio set always ready to operate at peak power. Ask your dealer. Fansteel Products Company, Inc., North Chicago, Illinois.

WHO SHALL CONTROL RADIO IS PROBLEM FACING CONGRESS

Congressman Calls Proposed Advisory Commission "Spineless"—Senator Dill Disapproves Cutting Off Licensing of Stations

EXPRESSING the opinion that such a method of control as a Federal radio commission, functioning through the Department of Commerce, recently recommended by the National Radio Coordinating Committee, "wouldn't find much favor on the hill," and characterizing the advisory commission provided for in the White bill passed by the House as "spineless," Representative Ewin L. Davis of Tennessee of the House Conference Committee on Radio Legislation believes if the conferees could get together on the matter of how radio should be controlled—whether by an independent commission or by Secretary Hoover and an advisory commission—the other differences which now seem to loom could be speedily ironed out.

Although in the minority on the House side, the views of Judge Davis are significant, inasmuch as they are somewhat similar with regard to independent commission control as those shared by Senators Watson and Dill, who constitute the majority of the conferees on the Senate side.

"My position is that all quasi-judicial functions of radio legislation should be vested in an independent bipartisan commission," Representative Davis went on. "The kind of commission (along with the control vested in the Secretary of Commerce), provided in the White bill passed by the House would be spineless, for you could not expect to get men of capacity and responsibility to give proper attention to the subject where they only meet occasionally.

"Radio is a very technical, complicated subject, requiring for twelve months a year men of capacity, so they may be prepared to act speedily and effectively in the light of experience."

"The whole situation has to be straightened out by somebody," Judge Davis continued. "My idea is that it can be better and more satisfactorily done by an independent bipartisan regular commission than by any one man, and especially so as to a Cabinet officer who has a multitude of other duties requiring his attention and who would necessarily be compelled to leave the major part of the work to subordinates."

As was the case with Representative Davis of Tennessee, Senator Dill of Washington, author of the Dill Radio Control bill, showed little enthusiasm over the recommendation of the National Coordinating Committee that radio control be exercised by a Federal radio commission whose rulings would be administered by the Department of Commerce.

"Such a form of control would bring with it divided authority," the Senator said. "I am afraid it might prove a hodge-podge."

Neither did Senator Dill look with favor upon the introduction into the House of a resolution by Representative Wallace H. White of Maine to prohibit further licensing of broadcasting stations until permanent legislation is enacted, and another by Representative Samuel Dickstein of New York City to give Secretary Hoover complete authority over radio operation, licenses and wave lengths until Congress has decided on a final plan.

"In my opinion, the passing of these resolutions would be a bad mistake," Senator Dill continued, "and would only result in a delay. There will be plenty of time to rush emergency legislation through by March 3. The conferees can very likely agree if given time. Why despair now?"

Senator Dill expressed disapproval of cutting off the licensing of stations at this time, declaring that this would create a priority right and in effect a monopoly for those who already are so fortunate as to have licenses.

WAHG TO USE A NEW CALL THIS WEEK

Long Island Station to Be Known as WABC —Opening Concert On Friday

THE first program to be broadcast by the Atlantic Broadcasting Corporation will be put on the air over Station WABC Friday, beginning at 7:30 P. M. This station is WAHG, but the call will be WABC on and after Friday. The concert will open with an overture by the station's string ensemble, followed by musical comedy hits, an organ recital by Clarence Dickinson; the New York Philharmonic Master Musicians' studio orchestra, with Arthur Middleton, baritone; Paul Althouse, tenor; Nevada Van der Veer, contralto; Helen Stanley, soprano. The concert will close with selections played by Roger Kahn's Orchestra, the Balaika Orchestra and other dance orchestras. Congressman Arthur M. Free of California, member of the Radio Committee of the House of Representatives, will talk on radio at 10 o'clock on this opening program of WABC. The subject of the Californian's talk will be "Radio Past and Future and What May the Listener Expect."

Roger Wolfe Kahn and his orchestra will offer forty-five minutes of dance rhythm beginning at 10:10.

Programs of a similar nature will be radiated from WABC on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays hereafter

Willem Mengelberg will conduct the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in the Student's Concert of that organization to be broadcast by WJZ, WRC and WGY, at 8:25 o'clock Saturday night.

In the coming concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra five selections will be played. In the first half of the program the overture to Lalo's opera, "L'Roi d'Ys," will be followed with "Chaconne" and "Rigaudon" from Monsigny's opera, "Aline." The first half of the concert will be concluded by the playing of the sonata in G minor by Tartini, the violin and solo bass parts of which have been orchestrated by Zoltan Kurthy. One selection will follow the intermission and it will be Brahms's piano concerto No. 1, at which time Mieczyslow Muns will play the piano solo part.

New Series of Concerts by Operatic Stars to Begin New Year's Night—Vice President Dawes and Charles M. Schwab on the Air Saturday

A SERIES of broadcast programs to be given by famous artists, the opening concert to be broadcast on New Year's night, Jan. 1, 1927, will be sponsored by the Victor Talking Machine Company, according to an announcement by the National Broadcasting Company, who will provide facilities for the broadcasting.

The opening program will be of two hours' duration, from 9 to 11 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, and broadcast simultaneously through more than a score of stations, including WEAF and WJZ in New York. Announcement of the artists to participate will be made within the coming week, it was said.

The opening program also inaugurates a new chain system to be operated by the National Broadcasting Company with WJZ as the "key" station. The chain will be known as the "Blue Network," and will allow simultaneous broadcasting from WJZ through WBZ, Springfield and Boston, KDKA, Pittsburgh, and KYW, Chicago. For the broadcasting of the first program the "Blue Network" will be joined with the "Red Network," as the WEAF chain is known, as well as other stations throughout the country.

Following the New Year's night presentation, these concerts will be broadcast bi-monthly on Friday nights from 9 to 10 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time.

Vice President Charles G. Dawes, Charles M. Schwab and ex-Governor William C. Sproul of Pennsylvania and Irvin Cobb will address the radio audience from the annual dinner of the Pennsylvania Society of New York, to be broadcast by WJZ at 9:30 o'clock Saturday night.

Charles M. Schwab, Chairman of the Board of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and a native of the State of Pennsylvania, will preside at the meeting and introduce the speakers.

Station WJZ has been turned into a distributing point for the mail of Santa Claus. In response to a single broadcast of Santa Claus one night last week letters addressed by children arrived at that station by the bagful.

Governor Alfred E. Smith is scheduled to speak at the annual dinner of the Survey Associates to be held in the Hotel Astor at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow night. His subject will be "Water Power." WJZ will broadcast the address.

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, contralto, will be heard next Sunday night at 9:15 o'clock through WEAF and a chain of stations.

A week from Tuesday, Elsie Janis, actress, will be heard on the WEAF chain, with songs and stories. She will be accompanied by an orchestra and begin broadcasting at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time.

Each afternoon of this week, beginning tomorrow at 2:45 o'clock, Maurice Dumesnil, French pianist, will be heard in a lecture-recital from WOR, accompanying himself on a piano originally used by Chopin.

Following the practice of foreign countries, legislation exacting a receiving set tax of $5 annually has been approved by the Philippine Government.

RADIO SEASON ARRIVES IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON'S radio fan who has established a record of tuning-in 285 stations in a report this week says: "The night of Nov. 27 and several good ones that followed in the past week were only curtain raisers to the real début of the Winter radio season of 1926-27, which must be recorded as having really begun Saturday night, Dec. 5. This night, without exception or qualification—meteorologically speaking—was the best I have ever experienced during the period of some three years that I have been twisting the dials as a DX hunter. Stations came in so clearly and strongly that it was easy to turn from one to the other. Reception was particularly good from the West and Northwest. Without stopping to enjoy numbers it would easily have been possible to get more than fifty or sixty stations that night. As it was, I tuned in forty-five stations, many from the West, putting every one, including KOA, Denver, on the loud-speaker for friends who were present part of the time.

"Tried to reach the Coast again but failed. I was unable to get KFI, at Los Angeles, or KGO, San Francisco, and do not know whether they were on the air at the particular times I hunted for them. But twice I picked up an orchestra at the point where KPO, San Francisco, would register. The music was clear but announcement indistinct, as this station only of all picked up Saturday night was too weak in signals to make the loud-speaker. My Saturday night list included, besides Denver, New Orleans, Hot Springs, St. Louis, Kansas City, Shenandoah, Iowa; Bristow, Okla.; Miami and Detroit. Sunday night was also fairly good, but a trace of static, which did not prevent getting Havana and Dallas. About 2 o'clock Saturday night it began to snow here and it was quite cold.

"There have been other good nights in former Winters, including one last Winter, when I logged as many or more stations in a single night, but never an evening when without trace of static the stations came so well. The air was as pliable, figuratively speaking, as a lump of putty. More nights like this and real Government regulation of wave lengths and the radio fan's paradise would be here.

"Tell your friends if they want to hear something good next Saturday night to tune in New Orleans, WSMB, for the Cotton Picking Twins, playing popular airs by request. KMOX, St. Louis, comes through well now, and the new station at Knoxville, WNOX, is fine."

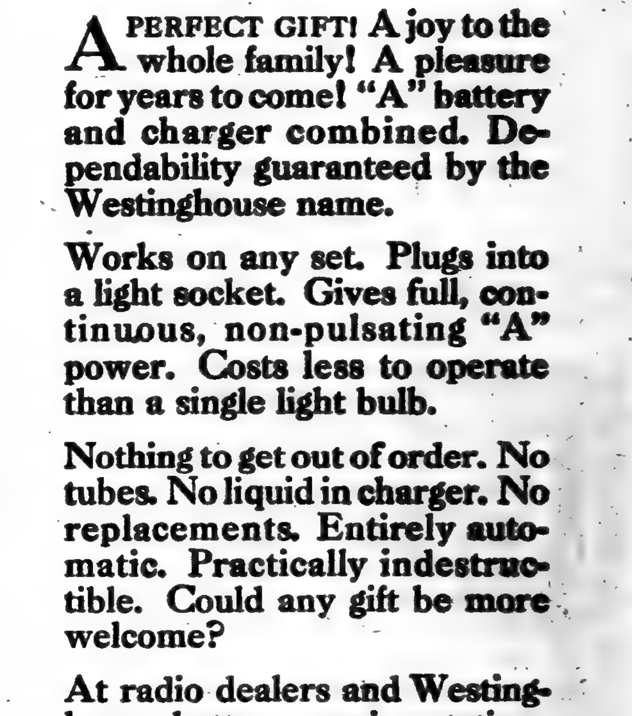
Give for Christmas a Westinghouse Radio "A" AUTOPOWER

Absolutely Automatic in Operation



A PERFECT GIFT! A joy to the whole family! A pleasure for years to come! "A" battery and charger combined. Dependability guaranteed by the Westinghouse name.

Works on any set. Plugs into a light socket. Gives full, continuous, non-pulsating "A" power. Costs less to operate than a single light bulb.

Nothing to get out of order. No tubes. No liquid in charger. No replacements. Entirely automatic. Practically indestructible. Could any gift be more welcome?

At radio dealers and Westinghouse battery service stations everywhere.

Let your radio help to make Christmas merry

SPECIAL Christmas programs will be broadcasted from the big stations. And you'll want to hear this splendid entertainment just as it is rendered.

If your radio is not functioning at its highest efficiency send for one of our representatives. He'll make a thorough examination of your set, and give you a written report of its condition. We do this, and also make minor repairs on the spot—for $5.00. Often a simple adjustment is all that's needed.

Hundreds of radio owners are utilizing our service. Result, we're mighty busy. To avoid disappointment, phone now for a representative.

CITY'S SNOW ARMY IS ALWAYS READY

Mobilization of Men and Machines, Planned in The Summer Months, Is Swiftly Carried Out on Call From Headquarters

TO the average resident of New York a snowstorm such as recently visited the city is an event to be viewed with pleasure or disgust, according to whether he is a romanticist or a realist in such matters, but to those city employes charged with seeing that it does not interfere with traffic and the normal life of the city any more than can possibly be helped, it is a problem necessitating a vast and intricate organization, employing thousands of men, hundreds of machines and spending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually.

As soon as the first flakes begin to spiral down from the sky the machinery of that organization is set in motion, following plans worked out in past seasons and during the Summer months. Everything has been thought out beforehand and every emergency provided for, because once the snow begins to fall there can be no thought of anything else but getting it off the streets as fast as possible. While children are out trying to scrape together enough snow to make one good-sized snowball, the first squadrons of sweepers are already at work, and by the time their elders have begun to worry about their cars getting stalled in drifts hundreds of snowplows have started cruising up and down the main highways and thousands of men with shovels have appeared all over the city.

Where that army of men springs from is always a mystery to the casual observer, as well as what they do between times, and why there should be so much labor suddenly available even in times of shortage. The answer is to be found in a suite of rooms high up in the Municipal Building. It is called the Snow Office, a division of the Department of Street Cleaning, and here the organization of snow removal is centred.

The Snow Office is comparable to the military headquarters of an army, and it is from there that the general mobilization is carried out as soon as a snowstorm begins. First the standing army goes into action, then the reserves, and finally, in the case of a severe storm, additional troops are drafted, until enough men are at work to cope with the situation. The Snow Office has charge of Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx, and there are 1,040 miles of streets in this territory, which gives some idea of the magnitude of the undertaking. There are thirty district stations in this area, where men are stationed from December to April, permanently, with tools and machinery. They have 677 snowplows, ready for action, as well as many loading machines, and trucking companies are under contract to the city to be ready with their fleets of vehicles.

This is the standing army. Their first concern is to keep open the main arterial highways and the streets leading to bridges and ferries. Manhattan depends on the outside world for its food supply, and the thousands of trucks which bring it in must have a clear way at all times if the people are to be fed.

Naturally, it is not feasible to keep more than a part of this army of men permanently on the payroll, so a reserve system is built up. This is called the emergency snow force. The enrolment takes place at the police stations throughout the city during the Fall months. The call goes out from the district political clubs and through notices flashed on the screens of the neighborhood motion picture theatres that men who want to work at snow-shoveling during the Winter may enroll. When they report at the police station they fill out cards that not only give their names and addresses but the position of the rooms in which they sleep, the floor, whether front or rear, and even whether north, south, east or west in the building, so that they may be speedily summoned at night.

Then they receive notification and identification cards to bring with them when they report for duty. These instruct them to "wear warm clothes, rubber boots or rubber overshoes. If you have no flannels use paper on the inside of your clothes to keep you warm."

As soon as the snow begins to fall the telephone wires in the snow office carry reports of how the work of combatting the storm is proceeding on 1,040 miles of streets. When the report comes in from a district that more men are needed there, the nearest police station is called up. The officer in charge turns to the filed cards, takes out as many as are needed and gives them to the patrolmen on whose beats the men live. Within a very short time the men are at work, in gangs, under the leadership of a regular sweeper, and supervised by inspectors, who are necessary to see that there is no undue loafing on the job.

With this system a moderate snowfall can be taken care of adequately, but in the case of a severe storm many more men are needed, sometimes to bring the total number up to 21,000 or more. Then the various lodging houses, Salvation Army homes and other centres of the unemployed are combed for men, and the itinerant vagabonds, who spend the Summer months in freight-car travel or on the sunny benches of city parks, have the opportunity to work for the city at 50 cents an hour.

This Winter it has been particularly difficult to get laborers because subway construction and building operations have absorbed most of those who have any desire to work, paying them higher wages than they can get shoveling snow. Even those who had no work in prospect were loath to leave the warmth of the free lodging houses to work in the cold drifts, because they felt sure that, when they were finally driven to work, they could get more remunerative and less exposed employment.

NO BIDDERS FOR KAISER SIGNATURE

APPARENTLY the transfer from Berlin to Doorn has destroyed the value of a Hohenzollern signature. At a recent auction sale in Germany letters of Schiller and Goethe fetched 330, 450 and 500 marks each. A four-line stanza in the writing of Heine was sold for 1,440 marks. Signatures and letters of Bismarck were valued all the way from 6 up to 600 marks, though a letter of General Ludendorff's commanded no more than 10 marks. When a letter of the ex-Kaiser's was put up there was not a single bidder for it at any price. The old guard of Imperialist Junkers insist that the letter was recognized as being so valuable that nobody could afford to offer a fitting price for it. This view, however, was not shared by Republicans.

HUMAN SACRIFICE NOT YET STOPPED

Practice Continues in Burma and British Dispatch Troops to End It—Nearly Every Race Appeased God With Blood

HUMAN sacrifice, the deliberate ceremonial killing of a human being, which has been practiced by nearly every race that has advanced beyond savagery, is not yet wholly extinct. This fact was brought to public notice last week by dispatches from Burma, which told of the efforts of the British Governor, Sir Spencer Harcourt Butler, to abolish the practice in the Nagas district of the not yet subdued segment of the mysterious East which he rules.

Recently, in a tour of the province, Sir Spencer found that the natives still clung to tribal ceremonies that have been under official interdict for over a century. He insisted that all slaves be freed in accordance with the law, and that human sacrifice be stopped. But the old tribal customs continued to hold sway. So two Government detachments have set out from Putao to enforce the edicts.

Burma, Kipling's land of the tinkly temple bells and the road to Mandalay, has been slow to accept the ideas of the West. Like India, of which it is a province, Burma has a civilization older than that of its conquerors, and it has held to the idea of propitiating the gods through human sacrifice along with other, more humanitarian, traditions. It is not very many years since the people of India, though under British rule, still made human sacrifices in the form of the suttee: the burning of the wives of a departed ruler on a funeral pyre after the ruler's death.

The difficulties encountered by English administrators in their efforts to root out a barbarous practice firmly intrenched in the religion and life of the people, illustrate the immense hold this idea has had on nearly all peoples, in all the ages of the world.

Human sacrifice is linked by Sir James G. Frazer with the beginnings of agriculture in paleolithic time. He has written that the first tillers of the soil felt the need of propitiating the nebulously conceived powers of the mysterious earth and air at seed time, so that a good harvest might be assured. Then the idea of giving the lives of victims as offerings was born, and with it the idea of an especially purified class to conduct the ceremonies—the first priests. Frazer traces the beginning of the idea of sacrament to the eating of a portion of the victim's body at a ceremonial feast, so that every one might share in the sacrificial benefits.

Throughout the ages men have made human sacrifices whenever they were under adversity and felt that the gods were athirst. H. G. Wells paints a graphic picture of a scene that may have occurred in the dawn of a prehistoric day about the vast stone altars on the Wiltshire uplands at Stonehenge, in England—the Druid priests with horribly painted masks, the air of festivity among the people who have come wearing their very best skin garments for the occasion and the helpless victims gazing toward the distant smoking altars upon which they are to die.

As time went on the practice of human sacrifice became more elaborate. The reasons and occasions for human sacrifice were codified. The most civilized races decided that an entire community might be cleansed of an epidemic or saved from other calamity by this barbarous means.

The Athenians kept a special supply of captives to stone to death outside the walls of the city in times of national calamity. Every schoolboy knows the story of the sacrifice of Iphigenia by her father during the Trojan War. In Rome human sacrifices were made until a century before the beginning of Christianity, when Pliny records the passage of a law against the practice. When Marco Polo visited Japan in the thirteenth century he found to his horror that the people of Zipangu, as he called the island, still observed the custom.

But the greatest field of that atrocious ceremony was in Mexico, at the time of the Aztecs. This reached its height during the thirteenth century and continued until the coming of the Spaniards. Aztec civilization was remarkable for its culture, and the contributions those people made to astronomy have excited the admiration of modern scholars. But in the public estimation greater than the marvelous calendar stone was their stone of the sacrifices, upon which thousands perished annually.

So obsessed did the Aztecs become with this dominating feature of their religion that wars were conducted with the one idea of gathering victims for the elaborate ceremonies. Not only were sacrifices made to the sun god and to the gods of the seasons, but all public holidays as well centred about them.

DUTCH UNIONS READY TO ACT

Will Lend Aid Promptly In Any European Labor Crisis

IN case of the outbreak of a general strike or the advent of any other great emergency in the ranks of European labor, the Dutch trade unions will be in a position to lend prompt financial aid, as the result of the adoption of a resolution at the recent Utrecht convention of the Netherland Federation of Labor.

This resolution provides that the Executive Committee, in agreement with the affiliated organizations, may immediately place at the disposal of the national trade union federation of any other country a maximum sum amounting to 10 per cent. of the total money in the Dutch national strike fund. Furthermore, the Executive Committee may make a loan to the same amount to a foreign national federation. Such aid is to be forwarded through the Amsterdam Bureau of the International Federation of Trade Unions.

In the discussion preceding the adoption of the resolution it was pointed out that experience in both the Dutch strike of 1925 and the British general strike of last Spring had shown that under the former system assistance could not be dispatched quickly enough. The strike fund of the Dutch unions now totals more than $400,000. It was founded five years ago and is maintained by weekly contributions.

MAMARA-LINARI WIN SIX-DAY RACE

GEORGETTI-BELLONI NEXT

and Stockholm in Third Place, One Lap Behind in Grind.

FANS ARE THRILLED

Many Riders Knocked Unconscious in Furious Jamming That Ends Evening.

McNamara, bicycling's iron man, and Pietro Linari, his sturdy riding mate, won the forty-first international six-day bicycle race in Madison Square Garden last night. [illegible] 20,000 fans were thrilled by the final hour of mad riding which ended the grind.

The thrilling last hour of sprinting every mile McNamara and Linari, riding as if their very lives depended on the result, outrode Franco Georgetti and Gaetano Belloni, sturdy Italian team, finishing far ahead of their rivals on points. These two teams were even on mileage covered during the 144 hours of riding which ended last Sunday night at 9 o'clock. McNamara and Linari had 884 points, Georgetti and Belloni had 545 points.

When the pedalled over the finish line winner the first to greet the [illegible] McNamara were his wife and daughter. It was McNamara's eleventh six-day race triumph, and his first appearance in local competition.

Third position was the team of Oscar Egg, Master of New York and Carl Stockholm, the Chicago youngster, who stuck with the leaders until the last few minutes of the grind, when, in a desperate effort of their own making they [illegible] the loss of a lap. Winter and Stockholm had 625 points, their lap disadvantage accounting their point age.

The other teams which finished the race were in the following order with their mileage and points:

Two laps behind, Georges Wambst and Charles Lacquehay, French team, 472 points; four laps behind, Otto Petri-Lands, German-American team, with 433 points; six laps behind, Carl Walker and Tony Beckman, 207 points; Tom Bello and Norman Hill, 2 [illegible] Alec McHeath and Bill Gramm, 309 points; nine laps behind, Tony Garrison and Alfredo Dinale, 309 points.

Three Teams Withdrawn.

The Belgian team of Alphonse Gooseus and Charley Stockelynch, the fourth in a four-cornered deadlock on account for the lead as the race entered its last hour, was compelled to withdraw shortly before the finish due to injuries sustained by Stockelynch in one of three nerve-tingling spills which characterized the closing of the grind.

McNamara and Linari covered 2,286 miles and 9 laps and Georgetti and Belloni covered a similar distance. A premium for stolen laps was made in this grind, for with the laps stolen by McNamara and Linari and Georgetti and Belloni in the last hour, the aggregate was brought to 304 circuits, one more than the previous record, made in the last Chicago six-day race.

McNamara and Linari finished the race without one of their nerve alone. The two were stretched out unconscious on the floor of the track at 10:45, just a few minutes before the race was to have closed, the result of a bad spill at the height of one of the most spectacular sprint outbursts a six-day race has ever produced.

McNamara quickly revived and with his dauntless spirit which has established him as one of the greatest six-day riders of all time was off again after a few minutes of rest.

Linari was more severely shaken up than his riding mate, but he showed the same pluck and remounted, with his left shoulder heavily bandaged.

Three Riders Are Stopped.

The climax of the excitement came in a frantic hour of cycling, in which three riders were stopped three times by the ringing of the emergency bell on accidents. McNamara launched the first lap-stealing shortly after the fourth official sprint, and, aided by a valiant effort on the part of Linari, was well on the road to a lap on the field when Georgetti crashed to the track. After banging into the wheel of Winter rounding the Eighth Avenue turn, the speedy little Italian recovered quickly, however.

The fall was off the race thereafter. The Garden was a veritable bedlam, as the cyclists pedalled after points in the hourly sprints and after laps in the bunch, which overlapped the official contingent.

After the seventh spurt Belloni went down on a riding drive, but was quickly remounted. Then after the ninth spurt Winter state away from the pack in a frantic bid for a lap, which carried through the tenth and eleventh miles, ending only when Lands and Stockelynch went down on the Eighth Avenue turn, the Belgian being catapulted through space to land a distance of some twenty feet away unconscious and carried out of the race. Goossens rode for a while alone, but he, too, withdrew before the final few sprints.

At the conclusion of the race Stockelynch was still in the dressing quarters of the Garden undergoing treatment for bruises to the face, arms and legs which were visible, and possibly internal injuries.

The emergency gong sounded the end of this jam, but the race was resumed without undue delay and again the riders were off. After the twelfth sprint Winter again stole on the pack and through the thirteenth and fourteenth miles this jam was sustained, McNamara and Linari replacing the two Chicago youngsters as the seekers after the lap, when Winter and Stockelynch, overhauled by the veteran and

TENNIS BODY BARS RANKING RICHARDS

BUT ACTION IS NOT FINAL

General Meeting Has Power to Overrule Measure—Bans Pros From Amateur Play.

The Ranking Committee of the Metropolitan Lawn Tennis Association was censured indirectly for its action in ranking Vincent Richards at the head of the metropolitan list when the Executive Committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, in its annual December session at the Hotel Vanderbilt yesterday, unanimously passed a recommendation to the annual meeting of the organization that "none but amateur players shall be ranked in any ranking of the national association or its subsidiary associations."

Richards was placed at No. 1 in the ranking of the Metropolitan Committee which was made public this month. His presence in the list came as a surprise to many who were of the opinion that he had eliminated himself from consideration for ranking by turning professional and joining the exhibition tour of Mlle. Lenglen.

As William Fischer of this city is Chairman of both the metropolitan and national ranking committees, Richards's inclusion in the sectional list indicated that he would receive a rating in the national ranking also. The latter ranking was submitted by Fischer at the Executive Committee meeting yesterday. While it was not given out either for publication or for the private information of the press, it is practically a known fact that he was in the ranking as submitted.

Goes to National Body.

The action of the Executive Committee does not definitely exclude Richards from the official ranking, for it must come before the annual meeting of the U. S. L. T. A. in February for final action, but it shows the attitude of the officials of the association, and their opinion is likely to have considerable weight with the delegates to the meeting in February.

On the other hand, it will be recalled that two years ago the annual meeting overruled the Executive Committee after the latter body had made changes in the ranking as laid before it, and with William Tilden leading the opposition passed a ranking of its own, going back to the original one. It is possible that the annual meeting may refuse to obey the recommendation of the Executive Committee, and at any rate there is the prospect of the coming session being a less harmonious one than was last year's.

Should the recommendation be followed Richards will not be included in the national ranking, in spite of the fact that it is a foregone conclusion that he is in the ranking as submitted yesterday by Chairman Fischer.

This means that either each player in the ranking will be moved up one position, should Richards be dropped, or that the ranking will have to be thrashed out entirely on the floor, with the prospect of the annual meeting naming its own committee to work in conjunction with the Ranking Committee to make a final list. The ranking will not be made public this year until the annual meeting is held.

The metropolitan ranking has yet to be passed upon by the New York State Lawn Tennis Association, which will hold its meeting in February at Syracuse. Should the association uphold its Ranking Committee, the ranking will stand, but it will not be published in the official year book of the U. S. L. T. A. in the event the recommendation of the Executive Committee is followed. Should the State L. T. A. fail to uphold its Ranking Committee, then the ranking will have to be revised forthwith.

Resolution Is Presented.

The recommendation of the Executive Committee followed upon the presentation of a resolution by Holcombe Ward, Chairman of the Amateur Rule Committee, barring Richards, Miss Mary Browne, Howard Kinsey and Harvey Snodgrass, all members of the Lenglen entourage, from playing in any amateur match or tournament held under the auspices of the U. S. L. T. A. and which is to be forwarded to the International Lawn Tennis Federation.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas, it is common knowledge that certain former amateur tennis players have contracted to play and have actually played exhibition tennis matches for pay, be it resolved that Vincent Richards, Howard O. Kinsey, Harvey Snodgrass and Miss Mary Browne are hereby declared to have forfeited their amateur status and to be disqualified from playing in any amateur match or tournament played under the auspices of the U. S. L. T. A.

"And, furthermore, be it resolved, that the Secretary of the U. S. L. T. A. shall forthwith forward a copy of this resolution to the International Lawn Tennis Federation, of which the U. S. L. T. A. is a member, in accordance

Oscar Schlossberg of P. S. 89 Brooklyn Winning 100-Yard Dash in School Meet Yesterday

FOUR MARKS FALL IN P. S. A. L. GAMES

Two Relay, Sprint and Jump Records Set in Elementary Schools Title Meet.

P. S. 9, BROOKLYN, WINS

Captures Team Honors for the Third Successive Year With a Total of 60 Points.

Public School 9 of Brooklyn won the twenty-fourth annual elementary schools indoor track and field championship games held yesterday afternoon in the 102d Engineers Armory on Washington Heights. The youngsters from across the bridge scored 60 points, three times as many as the next best school, which was P. S. 89 of Manhattan. It was the third consecutive triumph for Coach Onken's charges and their prowess was attested to by a howling crowd of 5,000 youngsters, who filled the galleries and floor of the Armory. P. S. 89 of Brooklyn was third with 18 points.

The championship was one of the most successful ever conducted by the Public Schools Athletic League and was attended by many figures well known in the athletic world. Gustavus T. Kirby, Vice President of the P. S. A. L. and Chairman of the Board of the N. C. A. A. A. A., was present in addition to Murray Hulburt, President of the Amateur Athletic Union, and Joseph Sheehan, Associate Superintendent of Schools. These men took part in the parade of athletes and the salute to the flag which preceded the start of the games.

It was estimated that more than 2,000 schoolboys competed in the twenty-three events which drew representatives from about fifty of the public schools of the greater city. Twenty of the events were for elementary schoolboys and three for junior high schoolboys. The events were divided into three classes—Sprints, relay races and field events.

1926 Sprint Mark Falls.

Four records fell before the host of athletes. One was a sprint, two were relay marks and the fourth a field record. Douglas Washington, diminutive negro sprinter of P. S. 184 Manhattan, broke the first record when he ran the forty yards in 5 3-5 seconds, a fifth of a second better than the time made in 1920.

The two new relay records were made in junior high school events and both by athletes from the Frederick Douglas junior high school. The 440-yard relay mark in the 120-pound class was set at 0:50 2-5, two full seconds better than the mark established last year. The 880-yard unlimited weight class relay record was reduced a fifth of a second to 1:45. The old record was made in 1923. The first Frederick Douglas team consisted of George West, Howard Carlos, George Lamden and Marion Miller. The other was made up of William Merrill, William Pond, William Harvey and William Austin.

David Corker of P. S. 22, Manhattan, was the youngster who made the field event record when he jumped 7 feet 7½ inches in the standing broad jump in the 80-pound class. This bettered by six inches the mark established last year.

Although P. S. 9 of Brooklyn figured in none of these record breaking performances, its representatives rolled up such a total of points that it was quickly apparent that they would win the team prize. The Brooklyn youngsters captured six firsts, seven second prizes, four thirds and one fourth, placing in thirteen of the twenty events for which they were eligible. The three junior high school events were not open to the elementary school athletes.

Sweep Jumping Events.

Coach Onken's youngsters did not score at all in the sprints, but swept the jumping contests and also counted heavily in the relay races. The running high jumps particularly saw P. S. 9 to the fore. There were three of these, 85, and 100-pound classes and unlimited weight class. P. S. 9 took first and second in all three events.

P. S. 9 also won the first and second in the 100-pound standing broad jump and first in the 85-pound standing broad jump. The unlimited 880-yard relay went to P. S. 9, as did third places in the 100 and 115 pound 440-yard relays. The school also took second in the eight-pound shot-put for

Spitfire VI Travels 43.67 Miles an Hour, Beating 2 World's Records for Hydroplanes

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Dec. 11 (AP).—Smashing two world's records for hydroplanes, Spitfire VI, 151-Class boat, owned by James H. Rand Jr. of Buffalo, N. Y., and driven by Stanley L. Reed of Detroit, led all entries here today in the opening program of a speed regatta which has attracted to San Diego the fastest craft of their kind in the world.

In the third heat Reed drove the midget speedster over the five-mile oval course in 6 minutes and 52 seconds, or at the rate of 43.67 miles an hour. This breaks the former record of 42.42 miles an hour for the same distance on an oval course, held by Spitfire V, and also the world's record for straitaway, held by General, owned by Lionel Barnesson of Los Angeles, which made a former mark of 43.06 miles an hour.

Jake F. Lemm, driving Boots II, owned by Waugh Brothers of Peoria, Ill., missed reaching the former 1926 record, hanging up a mark of 42.38 miles an hour for the five-mile course, which he covered in 7 minutes 4.7 seconds.

Behind Reed was Harry Miller of Los Angeles, driving his own Los Angeles II. Miller covered the five-mile course in 7 minutes 8.2 seconds, or at the rate of 42.04 miles an hour.

M'CALLISTER NAMED MANAGER OF INDIANS

Veteran Coach Succeeds Tris Speaker as Leader of the Cleveland Club.

CONTRACT FOR ONE YEAR

New Pilot Never Played in Big Leagues, but Long Service With Indians Won Him Position.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 11 (AP).—Jack McCallister, for thirteen years scout and coach of the Cleveland Indians, will manage the tribe during the 1927 season. E. S. Barnard, President of the club announced today that McCallister had been appointed to succeed Tris Speaker, veteran outfielder, who resigned as manager several weeks ago.

The announcement followed a consultation between McCallister and Barnard at Asheville, N. C., last week, where they attended the National Baseball Association meeting. McCallister will take charge of the team immediately and attend the American League meeting in Chicago next week as the tribe's new chief.

Although McCallister never played a game in the big leagues, he was selected over more than a dozen applicants, some of whom have starred under the big top for years.

Wide experience as coach and scout and his knowledge of players in the American League led to his selection, Barnard said.

Is an Ohio Product.

McCallister's many years' service with the team was given as another reason for his selection. Jack is also an Ohio product. He started in the sand lots of Marietta, Ohio, his home town, and from there went to Columbus, serving under Bobby Quinn, now President of the Boston Red Sox. At Hartford, where he played in the old Connecticut League, he attracted the attention of big league scouts and was slated to go to the St. Louis Cardinals when the season ended.

At the close of the season he played in a benefit game in his home town and while sliding to the plate split his knee cap. The injury kept him out of baseball for two years and he then went to Albany. In 1912 he was with Akron and the following year became scout for the Indians.

When Speaker became manager of the Indians, McCallister was named coach and chief lieutenant. He devoted much of his time to developing the infield and assisted Matty Mathews, battery coach for the Indians, in training the pitching staff.

Jack is well known in the American League and has the confidence of the Cleveland players. His knowledge of the American League players and of the weaknesses of clubs in the league was regarded as particularly in his favor, Barnard said.

McCallister has been thoroughly acquainted with conditions in the Cleveland club since he played with the Columbus team. It was there that he met Barnard and the two have been close friends since. He will spend the

BASEBALL HEADS MEET THIS WEEK

Landis Likely to Be Re-elected as Commissioner as Johnson Opposition Wanes.

TRADE OUTLOOK IS MILD

All of Clubs in the Market for Players, but Few Deals Seem in the Making.

By JAMES R. HARRISON.

The baseball magnates will go into conference behind closed doors this week and discuss matters of more or less moment to the national pastime, including, as the piece de resistance, the re-election of Kenesaw M. Landis as High Commissioner for seven more years.

The National League moguls will go into their annual huddle at the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday. On the same day, also on Wednesday, the American League will assemble at the Congress Hotel in Chicago. Following their session here the National League magnates will entrain Wednesday for Chicago, where the joint meeting of the major leagues will be held Thursday at the Congress.

In this routine program there seems to lurk no danger of baseball wars, battles, upheavals or even an acrimonious debate between Judge Landis and Ban Johnson. Apparently Landis will be returned to office on a landslide. Already two American League clubs and seven National have lined up with him, and the other magnates are likely to leap aboard the bandwagon, particularly since the minor leagues indicated in no uncertain terms last week that Judge Landis is the boy for them.

With the dove of peace cooing softly over the Landis-Johnson feud, the last prospect for a good old-fashioned scrap has vanished.

Other Business Technical.

To the baseball fan who is hungering for one-hand catches, home runs and the succulent smack of the bat against the ball, there is nothing nourishing in the fact that the two leagues will take up the matter of the draft rule, the 1927 schedules, ratifying a new American League schedule and other technical details.

There is not even a good chance that any trades will be made. The ivory market is very dull. Almost every club is looking for new players but they expect something for nothing. They are willing to trade a broken-down horse for a lively thoroughbred, but under these conditionse there has not been an important trade pulled off at a league meeting in several years.

The meetings this year promise to be no exception. The Yankees, both Chicago clubs, the Giants, Reds, Braves, Robins and half a dozen other teams are in the market for new players, but this same condition exists throughout the twelve months of the year.

With Colonel Jacob Ruppert of the Yankees coming out yesterday in support of Judge Landis, the last doubt was removed that the Commissioner would be elected. However, there is a distinct possibility that even the National League may join in a move-

DEL MONTE, Cal., Dec. 11.—At the end of the second round of play in the Monterey Peninsula $5,000 open golf tournament on the Pebble Beach course here today Bill Mehlhorn of Chicago was leading the field by three strokes, with a total of 142 for the thirty-six holes. The championship will be decided tomorrow, when the final thirty-six holes will be played.

Mehlhorn today clicked off a 70. Scoring conditions were ideal and half a dozen cards better than par 73 were returned, whereas yesterday nobody bettered par and Mehlhorn was the only one who equaled it.

While Mehlhorn was holding to first place both of the rival professionals, Al Espinosa of Chicago and Hutt Martin of Los Angeles, who were only one stroke behind him at the start of today's play, lost ground with a 77 and 78, respectively.

Golden Has 145.

One New York entrant and two Californians were clustered three strokes behind Mehlhorn when the last of the 160 competitors finished in the dusk late today. They were Johnny Golden of the North Jersey Country Club, Paterson, N. J., with 75, 70—145; Harry Cooper, Los Angeles, 75, 70—145; and George Martin, veteran professional at the Virginia Country Club at Long Beach, with 74, 71—145.

Two strokes for the back, with 147, were George Von Elm, national amateur champion, and Al Watrous, who was the first professional in this year's British open championship.

Standing six or seven shots behind the leader at the half way mark are a dozen others, among them Johnny Farrell and Cyril Walker of the New York district, at 148, and Bobby Cruickshank, 149.

Mehlhorn went out in 33 today, three under par. He was over par on only one hole, the tenth.

Dutra Gets a 79.

Olin Dutra of Fresno was another who scored a 70 today and he had a five-foot putt for a 69 which rimmed the cup. Robert Clarke of San Francisco scored an eagle 3 on the 550-yard fourteenth hole by sinking his mashie niblick approach.

Von Elm improved in his iron play today, particularly on the inside nine, and he finished with a 71. Farrell, who was playing with the amateur champion, dropped a good putt on the home green to make the same score. Both putted better than yesterday.

The Eastern professionals have had some difficulty getting the hang of the greens, for the majority of them have not been seen in competition since they left the sand greens at Pinehurst.

One of the inspiring achievements of the day was the fight for a qualifying place made by Chandler Egan, the California amateur champion, who was intercollegiate champion in 1902 and national amateur titleholder in 1904 and 1905. An 85 yesterday appeared to kill his chance of qualifying. But he went out in 34 and returned in 39 for a total of 158, which just got him in.

Harold Hoekelman, Halfback, To Captain Cornell Eleven

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Harold Hoekelman of New York, star halfback on the Cornell football eleven, was elected to captain the team through the 1927 football campaign at a meeting of the lettermen here today. Hoekelman succeeds Captain Carey, left guard. The captain-elect played through the entire game with Penn and was one of the most consistent of Coach Dobie's ground-gainers.

PRESIDENT MACHADO AT HAVANA OPENING

ADRIA CAPTURES FEATURE

Filly Scores Popular Victory, Carrying Home the Colors of Cuba National Stable.

HAVANA, Dec. 11.—At Oriental Park, the beautiful home of the Havana-American Jockey Club at Marianao, the Winter racing season was opened this afternoon under the most favorable auspices. Perfect weather and the formal opening ceremonies that had been planned attracted a great gathering of lovers of the thoroughbred and never has a racing season here been inaugurated with such brilliant prospects.

The occasion was graced by the presence of President Gerardo Machado and the members of his staff. Ambassador Enoch Crowder and other members of the diplomatic corps were among the notables in the distinguished gathering, while members of the professions, leaders of society and visitors from the United States and other countries attended in large numbers, adding to the brilliancy of the occasion. One of the features of the opening ceremony was the presentation to President Machado of a gold membership button of the Havana-American Jockey Club.

Course in Fine Shape.

The picturesquely beautiful racing property was at its highest point of efficiency. The hurricane which wreaked such havoc recently in the island republic left its mark on the race course; but all damages were quickly repaired, and President John McE. Bowman has every reason to be proud of the property and the wonderful successful opening.

Never before in the history of racing in Cuba has the quality of the thoroughbreds stabled at the Mariano course been of such a high quality, and this is certain to be reflected in the racing from the very start. Stables that have never raced outside of the United States are showing their colors here for the first time, and it is safe to say that cheap horses will have a hard time paying their way. There are as many horses on the ground as can find employment, and it is evident that more stabling will have to be provided in the immediate future.

Cuba Stable Scores.

The daily card will be made up of seven races, with post time for the first race at 2 o'clock. The feature of opening day was the Inaugural Handicap, a dash of five and a half furlongs. Nine ran and the winner proved to be the three-year-old filly Adria by Hourless out of Adrienne, which was bred by Walter J. Salmon and is now running under the colors of the Cuba National Stable. As this stable is composed of some of the leading Cubans the victory of the filly was tremendously popular. She was in the medium of a very heavy play and went to the post at 6 to 5 in the betting. Pernia had the mount and the filly ran the distance under 112 pounds in the fast time of 1:06 1-5.

It was the great occasion for the players of form, since many of the winners were at short prices.

The summaries (AP):

Wins Third in Row at New Orleans, Beating Golden Mac by Length Margin.

FORM PLAYERS GLOOMY

Get Scant Cheer From Rest of Card as Three Victorious Favorites Are Short Priced.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 11.—The Duncan F. Kenner Handicap, the leading number on the program of the half-holiday at Jefferson Park, was an easy victory this afternoon for W. S. Heaton's veteran gelding Hopeless, making his third consecutive victory in four starts at the current meeting. The son of Huon and Kolinsky was the third choice in a field of five that took the journey of a mile and a furlong and he paid the nice price of $10.20 in the mutuels for each $2 invested. Finnerty had the mount on the winner, which carried only 106 pounds and ran the race in the slow time of 1:58 flat over a heavy track.

The victory of Hopeless was on the lucky order, as Mrs. J. H. Buscher's three-year-old colt Golden Mac appeared to be the best in the field. He was given a miserable ride by Whitaker and this cost him the race. Golden Mac was the favorite, backed almost to even money, and is at the very top of his form. With a first-class rider in the saddle he probably would have won by a decision margin.

Golden Mac was ridden just as Whiskery was ridden by little Workman in the Endurance Handicap at Bowie. Whitaker broke him on top and just ran the colt's legs off around the first turn, opening a lead of five lengths, and he had that advantage when he rounded the last turn into the homestretch. At this point Finnerty brought Hopeless up with his challenge. Whitaker now became hopelessly rattled, dropped the colt's head and the race was over. Golden Mac was a beaten horse, Hopeless coming on to win easily by a length. Golden Mac had three lengths over George de Mar, the second choice.

Jolt for the Players.

It was a tough race for the players to lose and there was not much consolation for them in the rest of the card. While three favorites won, all were at short prices, not one as good as 2 to 1. The course was still heavy from the recent rains and the mud runners were in their element. Craver took the riding honors with two winners, opening and closing the card with victories on Billy Witt and Adieu.

Once more the players started the day right when they made R. L. Baker's Billy Witt, three-year-old son of Prince Pal and Playful Edith, the favorite and he rewarded them with a victory, although he was at a short price, paying only $4.40 in the mutuels. He is a first-class muddier and, as he had won his last start here, the players went to him to the neglect of the other seven contenders. Craver had the mount on the gelding, which ran the mile and one-eighth of the claiming race in 2:00 flat.

Billy Witt got away well from an inside post position. He followed the early pace set by Mrs. F. Farrar's Levoy and was under double wraps for most of the journey. When called on he easily went to the front in the stretch and won by a length in a drive from F. H. Smith's Sun Rajah, which saved ground by coming through on the inside and finished with a good burst of speed. Levoy had a lot of early speed, tiring at the end to finish third.

Hawk God Humbled.

The public choice was soundly beaten in the race for the Assumption Purse, an allowance event for the two-year-olds over the course of five and a half furlongs. With a record of three victories at the meeting C. J. Ferraro's Hawk God was heavily played, backed to 7 to 5 at post time. The players bet all around on this race, a lot of money going for Frank Kelly's Medley and for J. S. Taylor's Scotland.

Hawk God ran an extremely disappointing race after being well up with the leader, and quit to finish fourth. Scotland, with Willie Garner in the saddle and carrying 108 pounds, was the winner all the way. Garner took the son of Light Brigade and Elizabeth M. out in front from the start. Despite the fact that he has never run over anything but a fast track he seemed quite at home in the going and came first past the winning post with a lead of three lengths over Medley.

Drummer Boy was four lengths back to take third money. The winner paid $9.40 for each $2 ticket in the machines.

Easy One for Hale.

The Lone Star Stable's veteran gelding Halu was an easy winner of the claiming event at a mile and three-sixteenths, making every post a winning one and leading the nearest of his eleven opponents home by a margin of four lengths. McElroy had the mount, and the winner was the even-money favorite, paying $4 in the mutuels.

Another short-priced favorite rewarded his followers when G. C. Winfrey's five-year-old gelding, Wild Aster, led a field of eight platers at the finish of the six-furlongs dash under claiming conditions. The winner paid $4.60 and won easily. There was also a lot of money for J. B. Par-

World's Scholastic Relay Record Broken by De Witt Clinton High Swimmers

CLINTON SWIMMERS SET WORLD'S MARK

Win 200-Yard Relay in 1:41, Smashing Universal Scholastic and P. S. A. L. Records.

FIVE MEN HOLD WATCHES

On Time Performance of Kojac, Augman, Wald and Dreyfus in Series of Senior Meets.

The world's scholastic and P. S. A. L. records for 200-yard relay swimming fell together at the weekly series of dual meets for the senior high school aquatic championship of the P. S. A. L. in the seventy-five-foot pool of Columbia University yesterday afternoon.

The team of De Witt Clinton H. S., composed of Kojac, Augman, Wald and Dreyfus, covered the 200 yards in 1:41 flat, five timekeepers atking the performance. This feat wiped out the universal high school standard of 1:41 2-5, held by Roddy, Meany, Lerch and Bunnell of Mercersburg Academy since Feb. 22, 1922, and the P. S. A. L. record of 1:42 4-5, established by a George Washington H. S. quartet one week ago.

George Kojac, swimming first on the Clinton team, thrashed his alloted fifty yards in 0:24 2-5, beating by one-fifth of a second the league standard of his own making. Unfortunately, only two watches split on him, so the feat cannot be bracketed.

Leading Teams Win.

The teams of Stuyvesant H. S. and Manual Training, leaders on even terms in the title tourney, were successful in their engagements and remained on top. Stuyvesant downed Erasmus Hall, 34 to 28, and Manual outpointed Evander Childs, 36 to 26.

George Washington and De Witt Clinton, tied for third place, also retained the position by respectively defeating the H. S. of Commerce, 46 to 15, and James Monroe School, 43 to 19.

In the other contested matches Brooklyn Technical won from Boys' H. S., 35 to 27; Flushing from New Utrecht, 37 to 26; Thomas Jefferson from Textile, 51 to 9; James Madison from Alexander Hamilton, 44 to 17, and Townsend Harris from Jamaica, 53 to 2.

Morris Natators Idle.

FINISHES SERIES IN LEAD

Beats Seward Park and Will Meet 2d Division Winner for Title—Two Breast-Stroke Standards Set.

Two of the season's records were shattered in the first division final dual meets for the junior high school swimming championship of the Public Schools Athletic League in the sixty-foot pool of P. S. 11, Manhattan, yesterday morning.

Wolf of Henry O'Neil School lowered his own twenty-yard breast-stroke mark from 0:13 4-5 to 0:12 1-5 and the team of Lew Wallace, composed of Friend, Lasowsky, Zowatsky and Datokowsky, lowered the figures for the eighty-yard relay swim from 0:41 to 0:40 4-5.

The boys of Lew Wallace, leaders in this division, defeated Seward Park, 42 to 11, thereby concluding the series in first place and gaining the right to meet the winning team of the second division in the deciding match for the title, to be held after the close of the second division tournament on Jan. 8.

In the other contested engagements Montauk won from East New York, 32 to 5; Berriman from Nathan Hale, 42 to 2, and Henry O'Neil from Isaac Remsen, 44 to 9.

In the second division matches, held in the 60-foot pool of P. S. 70, in the Bronx, one of the season's records was beaten. Adolphe of Elijah Clark School clipped his own standard for the 20-yard breast stroke from 0:11 to 0:10 4-5.

The swimmers of Yorkville, undefeated and leading in the division, won from Hudson Park, 44 to 9, and remained on top. Paul Hoffman School, tied for second, defeated Patrick Henry, 37 to 10, and drew ahead of Prospect, due to the latter's having drawn the weekly bye.

All the other engagements were one-sided. Lake School downed Forsythe, 32 to 9; George Wingate trounced James Paulding, 34 to 13, and Elijah Clark downed Mount Morris, 34 to 14.

115-pound boys and second and third in the eight-pound shot-put for boys of unlimited weight. The other places were a second in the 115-pound standing high jump, a third in the 85-pound fifty-yard dash and fourth in the 90-pound standing broad jump.

Five of the points that enabled P. S. 89 of Brooklyn to gain third place were won by Oscar Schlossberg in the 100-yard dash. Competing in this event for boys of unlimited weight, the P. S. 89 flier got away to a good start, overhauled his field and then finished with a yard or more to spare. Schlossberg had previously won his heats in commanding style and was favorite to capture the final. J. Gordon of P. S. 57 of the Bronx was second. He gave Schlossberg his major opposition for most of the way. A good race was also run by W. Herbey of P. S. 93, Queens, who finished third.

One of the most eagerly awaited of all the races was that in which Marion Miller, star of the Frederick Douglass High School, appeared. Miller has never failed to set new records in all of his races this season, whether the performance was an individual one or with team-mates in a relay.

Yesterday he appeared as the anchor man on the Douglass team in the 440-yard relay and maintained his reputation by running an anchor leg in the race that was timed as the fastest in a race that lowered the previous mark by two seconds. The Mount Morris junior high school team finished second in this race and must be given credit for forcing the Frederick Douglass team to its fast time.

Wins, Nearly Gets Record Jump Wearing 'Lucky' Army Brogans

The desirability of using heavy army brogans in high jumping was demonstrated by John Thomas, star negro jumper of Public School 9 of Brooklyn, which won the elementary schools track and field championship yesterday afternoon. Thomas captured first prize in the running high jump and then went after the record. He failed to break it by a narrow margin. When he came to the judges' stand for his prize it was seen that he was wearing thick soled army shoes instead of the regulation rubber soled slipper. In explanation Thomas said that the brogans were "lucky" and helped his high jumping and that he could not jump in "sneakers."

COLUMBIA MATMEN DOWN ALUMNI, 13-11

Nichols Scores Only Fall of the Opening Meet—Johnson Also Is a Victor.

The Columbia varsity wrestling team opened its season yesterday with a 13-to-11 victory over an alumni outfit. Nicholas of the varsity was the only man to win his match by a fall, throwing Arida with a bar lock in 9:58. The Simmons-Haymen match resulted in a draw, while the remaining four matches were decided by the referee's decision and time advantage.

Bill Johnson, '24, former intercollegiate champion and a member of the 1924 Olympic team, won from Labasci by time advantage in the 175-pound division. The varsity was without the services of Captain Mike Sesit, who is still on the injured list from the football season.

The summaries:

115-Pound Class—Nichols, varsity, threw Arida, with bar lock in 9:58.
125-Pound Class—Simmons, varsity, and Haymen, alumni, drew.
135-Pound Class—Brennan, alumni, defeated Olliphant, time advantage, 1:02.
145-Pound Class—Henriques, varsity, defeated Carlson, referee's decision.
158-Pound Class—Hart, alumni, defeated Brown, referee's decision.

PELTZER IS VICTOR IN ARTILLERY MEET

Cousin of German Star Takes Two-Mile Special Event in 245th Armory.

RUCKEL FINISHES SECOND

Also Starts From Scratch, but Fails to Keep Up to Fast Pace Set by the Winner.

Starting from scratch in the special open two-mile handicap run, Hans Peltzer of C. C. N. Y., cousin of Dr. Otto Peltzer, German running star, threaded his way through the field to victory in the feature race at the annual Fall athletic meet of the 245th Coast Artillery at that organization's armory in Brooklyn last night. The meet, the fifty-eighth annual games, was witnessed by a crowd of 1,500.

Peltzer, who starred on the City College cross-country team this Fall, scored over another scratch man, William Ruckel of the Millrose A. C., who took second place. Third place went to Elmer Sanborn of the New York A. C., who had an allowance of 35 yards. Peltzer's time was 9:48.

In the 220-yard dash Frank Soprocki, who had won another sprint race previously in the evening, scored another victory from the scratch mark. He came from behind to overtake Varrin, a batterymate, and Smith of Battery E, to win the event. Varrin had an eight-yard handicap, while Smith had a start of four yards.

PRINCETON SIX TIES ST. NICHOLAS, 5-5

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 11.—Princeton and the St. Nicholas Hockey Club of New York divided honors in the Baker Memorial rink tonight, as the two teams fought to a 5-5 tie. No extra periods were played because the St. Nick sextet had to catch the New York train.

The scoring came in [illegible] Princeton getting off to a [illegible] when Johnny Pitman scored three [illegible] onds after the game had started and caged the disk again a few [illegible] later. Harding brought the Tigers into a 3—0 lead when he caged the rubber on a long shot down the middle of the ice.

Then the St. Nick team opened its attack. Watkins scored just as the first period ended, then Buckley, Popham and Watkins, with shots in quick succession, brought the New York team into the lead in the second period. A few seconds later Phil Strubing, who went in at centre [illegible] shifted to left wing, tied the score when he took the disk down the ice alone.

The teams came on the ice in the last period deadlocked, 4—4. Pitman scored on a pretty pass from Harding [illegible] his cage, and Baldwin scored the final point when Hughes, Tiger goalie, was drawn out of the cage by a fast [illegible] maga.

The line-up:

PRINCETON (5).		ST. NICHOLAS (5).
Hughes	G.	[illegible]
Trenholm	D.	[illegible]

St. [illegible] Watkins, 19 minutes 56 seconds; Buckley, [illegible] minutes 19 seconds; Popham, [illegible] seconds; Watkins, 37 minutes [illegible] Baldwin, 53 minutes 50 seconds.

Substitutes—Princeton: Harding, [illegible] Greene, Casey, Price. St. Nicks: [illegible] Haslam, Baldwin, Watkins, Foster, [illegible] Referee—C. W. Mitchell, Toronto. Time of periods—20 minutes.

C. C. N. Y. WRESTLERS LOSE

Bow to Brooklyn Poly, 18 to 9—Hague Scores Quick Victory.

The Brooklyn Poly wrestling team defeated the City College Matmen at the Brooklyn Poly gym last night by the score of 18 to 9. The Poly matmen won four of the seven matches and secured the only falls of the match. Captain Hague of Brooklyn registered the fastest victory of the evening when he threw Bloomfield with a body hold and armlock after twenty-five seconds of grappling. Captain Lewin triumphed over Nardi, who captained the Brooklyn Poly team last year, for the first time in three seasons.

The summaries:

115-Pound Class—Lewin, City College, defeated Nardi, Brooklyn Poly, time decision in 4:24.
125-Pound Class—Papparozzi, Brooklyn Poly, threw Markowitz, City College, with a body hold and half nelson after [illegible] onds in an extra period.

Some of the Stars Who Will Play in Garden This Week

OTTAWA TRIUMPHS OVER TORONTO SIX

Captain Boucher Leads Senators to 2 to 1 Victory in League Game.

MAROONS HELD TO A DRAW

Play 2-2 Tie Game With Pittsburgh —Black Hawks Beat the Canadiens.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 11 (AP).—Captain George Boucher led his Ottawa Senators to a 2 to 1 victory over the Toronto St. Patricks in a National Hockey League game here tonight. His winning shot came on a pass from Cy Denneny just two minutes before the final bell.

Maroons in Tie Game.

PITTSBURGH Dec. 11 (AP).—The Montreal Maroons and the Pittsburgh Pirates failed to break a 2-2 deadlock in an extra period here tonight and the contest went down as a tie. Herb Drury, Pirate player, was injured and had to be led off the ice. An X-ray will be taken tomorrow to see if he suffered a fractured left arm. The game was rough, especially in the final period when Cotton and Dutton were banished for two minutes for fighting.

Black Hawks Beat Canadiens.

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 11 (AP).—The Chicago Black Hawks defeated the Montreal Canadians in a National Hockey League fixture here tonight by a score of 3 to 0.

WEIR HELPS DEFEAT THE STEAMROLLERS

Youngstrom Also Aids in Frankford Eleven's 24-0 Victory Over Providence.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 11.—Ed Weir, former Nebraska star, and Swede Youngstrom, former Dartmouth guard, starred in the Frankford Yellow Jackets' 24 to 0 victory over the Providence Steamrollers here today in a National League game.

Touchdowns were scored by Stockton, Youngstrom and Homan. Weir kicked a field goal from the 20-yard line in the second period. He also kicked a point after touchdown and Tex Hamner added two. When Laird, former Colgate star, attempted to punt from behind his own goal line in the third period, Youngstrom blocked it and recovered.

The line-up:

MINNESOTA STARTS HOCKEY

Squad Has Reported for Practice— Six Games on Schedule.

Prospects of another championship hockey team at the University of Minnesota are not as bright as they were a year ago, but Coach Emil Iverson believes that he will have a strong six just the same. Five stars of last year's squad are missing this season.

Six Western Conference games have been scheduled, and in addition several preliminary contests are to be played. Captain Phil Scott of last season's championship team is the only first-string regular from that combination on the squad this Winter.

FIVE HOCKEY GAMES HERE THIS WEEK

Rangers Meet Boston Tonight and Americans Face Ottawa on Tuesday.

Mayor Walker to Present Trophy After First of the Three Contests is Decided.

This week will be an extremely active one locally among the hockey players. In the pro ranks there will be a game at Madison Square Garden tonight between the New York Rangers and the strong Boston sextet, and another on Tuesday night between the New York Americans and Ottawa, a great team that has made hockey history for several seasons. On Wednesday night, amid ceremonies of unusual interest, the new Metropolitan Amateur Hockey League will open its season.

Hockey in quantities to satisfy the most fervid fan is the program for the amateur opening, when three games of two twenty-minute periods each are scheduled for decision. The games are to be played for the benefit of the press and sports boys of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and Bishop Manning and Mayor James J. Walker will be among the guests present.

At the conclusion of the first game, which is to between the St. Nicholas and Canadian Club hockey teams of this city, Mayor Walker will present the Walker Trophy to te Metropolitan League. This is a silver and gold cup, which will go to the winner of the league race each year and will become the permanent property of the club winning it three times.

The second of the amateur games on Wednesday night should provide plenty of hair-raising hockey, as it brings together those old rivals, the Knickerbocker Hockey Club and the New York A. C. sextet. These teams had some bitter battles last year and undoubtedly will start right in where they left off. The third game of the amateur opening will be between the Seventh Regiment sextet and the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn. These teams, with the Canadian Club six, are new combinations in the amateur league, which is an all-local combination this year.

The society and sport worlds will be largely represented among those at the rinkside, and there will be added attractions to entertain the crowd. Among these will be the Canadian-Scottish bagpipers from Halifax, the Seventh Regiment Band, accompanied by the regiment in dress uniform, and Katie Schmidt with her famous ice ballet.

A big crowd also is expected to see tonight's program at the Garden between the Rangers and the Boston Bruins, led by the redoubtable Sprague Cleghorn. The Rangers, one of the three new teams to join the National Hockey League this year, got away to a flying start, and by very clean-cut play have jumped into the lead in the American division of the league.

Tonight's game should bristle with action. The Bruins were beaten, 1-0, by the Rangers in Boston on Tuesday night and will be out for revenge. It is fortunate probably that the Rangers have an ironbound defense in Ching Johnson and Taffy Abel, for the Boston attack will be a fiery one.

High-tension hockey also will be on tap Tuesday night at the Garden, when the rugged Ottawa men clash with the Americans for their second game of the season. No ice contest so far this year has created more interest in advance among the hockey fans than this one. It will be the renewal of a grim rivalry that began at Ottawa ten days ago, when the Americans lost a torrid 2-1 overtime battle to the fast-traveling Senators.

The Senators are undoubtedly a wonderful hockey combination, probably the most consistent winners that ever skated out on the ice. They have been in every Stanley Cup play-off since 1918 and have won the world's trophy three times. With Connell, King Clancy, Boucher and Nighbor in winning form they are an extremely hard combination for any team to beat, but the Americans will make desperate efforts to put over the big shot Tuesday night.

The line-up for tonight's game between the Rangers and Bruins follows:

BRUINS.		RANGERS.
Stewart	G.	Winkler
Shore	D.	Johnson
Cleghorn	D.	Abel
Herberts	C.	F. Boucher
Galbraith	W.	W. Cook
Oliver	W.	F. Cook

YALE CUP IS GIVEN TO W. W. ATTERBURY

Montclair Club Presents Trophy to Railroad Head at Roberts's Barn Party.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Dec. 11.—Yale's football rally in Nick Roberts's barn was held here tonight with great enthusiasm. About 200 alumni and a dozen members of last season's varsity made merry under the auspices of the Yale Club of Montclair, of which Nicholas Roberts is President.

The gathering was one of the most successful ever held by the Montclair club and was featured by the award of the cup for distinguished public service to W. W. Atterbury, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The award is made annually to that Yale graduate who has accomplished most for the public service. Mr. Atterbury is of the Class of '86.

Prominent among the Yale undergraduates who earned glory on the gridiron the season past were Captain Phil Bunnell and Captain-elect W. A. Webster. Fishwick and Scott, ends, were present, as was Sturhahn, the star guard, and McGunigle and Kline, backfield players.

The members of the Yale team were brought from the Yale Club in New York to Montclair in a special bus, which was escorted at high speed by New York City motorcycle policemen.

Gridiron stars of former years who were present included W. Orville Hickok, '95; Stubb Chamberlin, '97; Winslow Lovejoy, Captain in 1924 and star centre for three years; Doc Jordan, Captain in 1922.

Others present were Keyes Winter, '00; Ralph Bloomer, '05; Oliver C. Billings, '96; Charles Littlefield, '03; Allen Hirsh, '01.

The committee in charge of the rally consisted of Roberts, Littlefield, Hirsch, Herbert Snead, Philip Godell, George Fowler, Charles Ellicott and A. R. King.

YALE FRESHMEN LOSE.

Are Beaten in Polo Contest by Turkey Hill Trio, 10½-2.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 11.—The Turkey Hill polo team of Worcester, Mass., this evening defeated the Yale freshmen at polo in the Yale Armory, 10½ goals to 2. F. Bergstadt and E. Bergstadt starred with four goals each.

The line-up:

NAVY BEATS YALE IN SOCCER FINAL

Middies Close Season With Victory by 2-1—Wind Factor in Scoring.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 11.—The Naval Academy closed a successful soccer season by winning from Yale by 2 to 1 here this afternoon. A stiff wind blowing down the field had considerable influence on the score, all three goals being made when the wind favored the scorers.

After seven minutes of play Steiner scored for the Navy on a diagonal kick, and two minutes before the half closed Knoulton evened matters by butting the ball through. Yale having had the ball close to the Navy's goal for a large part of the second quarter.

The line-up:

NAVY (3).		YALE (1).

WISCONSIN BOOMS HOCKEY.

Also Stages Intramural Activities in Other Winter Sports.

The University of Wisconsin has entered upon another extensive Winter sports program, with hockey featured as the leading attraction. For many years Wisconsin has been developing its Winter sports program, being fortunate in having a setting at Madison equaled by few universities in this country for outdoor Winter sports. Hockey, however, has taken a big hold on the Wisconsin students, and, with the three-cornered battle among Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan as the drawing magnet attendance records have been set for several seasons and bid fare to be exceeded again this Winter.

However, hockey does not usurp all of the attention. Much interest has centred in developing other sports that depend upon snow and ice and a long, cold season.

Skiing, skating, tobogganing and ice-boating are highly popular. These latter sports are conducted mainly on an intramural basis and their benefits are extended to practically the entire student body. To better create interest in these sports a carnival is staged every Winter at which prizes are awarded.

ERASMUS IS VICTOR IN P. S. A. L. SOCCER

TRANI SCORES BOTH GOALS

Game, Played After Early Cancellation, Is Keenly Contested Despite Unfavorable Conditions.

The Erasmus Hall School soccer team annexed the city high school championship yesterday at Hawthorne Field by defeating the Thomas Jefferson eleven by 2 to 0. Fred Trani, star outside right of the winners, tallied both of the goals. Jefferson, by virtue of its six P. S. A. L. victories, was a pronounced favorite to capture the title, which was won last year by Commerce, but the Erasmus combination never let down in its assault of the Orange and Blue goal and registered one point in each half to win.

The game was played under unfavorable conditions. At game-time the field was covered with snow, but workmen soon cleared the surface. Earlier in the day Referee Lowrie had called off the contest, but the members of both teams were present and ready to play and the possibility that a postponement might result in a cancellation altogether, influenced the authorities to start play. Linesman Tarantino was the only official present and he volunteered to referee the encounter.

By the time the discussion between the coaches and P. S. A. L. officials had ended, there were no lines discernable and the judgment of the officials as to the whereabouts of the chalk strips had to be taken. When the teams lined up for the kick-off, an hour and a half behind scheduled time, about 200 spectators were in the stands.

At the start Jefferson worked the ball down into Erasmus territory. A kick bounded off the goal posts and just missed going into the net on the rebound. Trenis dove for the ball for a save. This was the closest Jefferson came to scoring during the keenly contested game.

The ball moved back and forth in midfield for the greater part of the first half. But shortly before the close of the period Erasmus received the ball on a penalty and it was kicked into a swirling group of players in front of the goal. In the close play which resulted Kasden passed to Trani and Erasmus registered its first goal.

Midway in the second half another penalty helped Erasmus to score its second goal. The victors received the ball immediately in front of the Jefferson goal posts and Trani booted the ball, which shot over to the side of the net. In attempting to dive for the ball Rabinowits slipped on the ice and the ball just eluded his outstretched fingers.

The line-up:

ERASMUS (2).		JEFFERSON (0).
Trenis	G.	Rabinowitz
Ruppel	R.B.	Babitch
Rachleff	L.B.	Scholnick
Armstrong	R.H.	Fisher

Clare	I.L.	Welner
Rapp	O.L.	J. Londinsky

Goals—Trani 2.

Substitutions—Fisher for Armstrong, Luckman for Clare.

Referee—Tarantini, Brooklyn Tech. Time of halves—Thirty minutes.

23 OF 42 ELEVENS LED BY LINEMEN

College Teams No Longer Depend on Backs for Captains— Some Name Two Each.

C. C. N. Y. IS ONE OF THEM

Yale and Princeton Among the Colleges That Pick Their Leaders From the Line.

Of the forty-two football captains elected so far this year to lead the college elevens of 1927, twenty-three are linemen and nineteen are halfbacks. There once was a time when all teams thought the field general had to be the captain and the captain the field general. Then came the change to the more liberal idea that any back could occupy the rôle of captain. After it was found that this system did not work a hardship on the team, some of the more revolutionary began to name linemen.

In recent football history, therefore, the linemen who have led their teams have been numerous, but this year they have gone into the lead and while colleges will continue to elect for some weeks to come, the margin now in effect is the same as from the first few elections, so it seems assured that linemen will lead when all balloting has ended.

Of the metropolitan elevens the following have named linemen as captains: Columbia, Fordham and C. C. N. Y. The latter, however, also will have a captain in the back field for the lettermen balloted to a deadlock with the result that next year the team will have two captains, Denstein, a halfback, and Clarke, a tackle. In selecting Furey, the Columbia men placed their reliance in an end, while Fordham selected a tackle when it named Feaster.

Texas Elect Two Captains.

Among other elevens that elected two were Texas and Worcester Tech. At the Austin school the vote ended in a tie and then a player who had received a broken leg in practice was asked to cast the deciding vote. He declined and Texas will go into action next season under two leaders, as did Notre Dame and more than one other Western eleven this year.

Yale and Princeton are among those to name linemen. Mosser, an end, will head the Tiger forces, and Webster, a guard, will be at the front of the blue eleven. Yale attaches special significance to Webster's election. He already has been captain of two preparatory elevens and the Yale freshmen. In addition, these teams were winners. Another omen is found in his Connecticut residence. No team lead by a Connecticut captain ever lost a title.

Camp Led Only Winners.

Beginning with 1876 Walter Camp was captain for two seasons, leaving a record of only victories for the two-year period. In 1889 William M. Corbin of Hartford, later State Tax Commissioner, was captain, and his eleven accumulated 497 points while Yale's opponents did not score.

In 1904 along came Jim Hogan, whose heavyweight Yale eleven crushed two of the most powerful teams ever gridironed by Princeton and Harvard. Hogan came from Torrington, which has given Yale since then Ray Pond and Johnny Hoben.

In 1909 Ted Coy was Yale's captain, and his team, Yale's greatest for more than a decade, smothered all opposition. Coy was the son of Principal Coy of the Hitchins School and also captained that school team before coming to Yale. Pond, one of Yale's greatest all-round athletic heroes, also came from the Hotchkiss School and is now Athletic Director there.

A list of the captains, arranged as to college and position played, follows:

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Dec. 11.—The Bethlehem soccer team defeated the Brooklyn Wanderers by 4 to 2 here today in an American League game. The tussle had gone only five minutes when Gillespie received a grand pass from Stark and opened the scoring with a great shot.

Brooklyn came back strongly, but clever defensive work by Eadie and Allen prevented them getting into the danger zone. Keeping up a fierce attack, Edwards was called upon to save a stinging drive from Eisenhoffer. The Steelworkers transferred the play and Stark notched the second goal from Jaap's pass ten minutes prior to the interval.

The Wanderers assumed the aggressive upon resuming and quickly reduced the lead against them when Eisenhoffer crashed the ball into the net from a perfect pass from Yule, but Stark made the score 3 to 1 in Bethlehem's favor ten minutes later.

Brooklyn again had much the better of the play and Yule scored from Nelson's pass soon after. There was no stopping the Wanderers now, who were all over the Steelworkers, but they did everything but score. Toward the end of the game Mahrer and Stark were injured and were carried off the field. In the closing minutes Bethlehem broke away and Gillespie scored the last goal.

NEW YORK DEFEATS QUAKERS AT SOCCER

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 11.—With Thompson of the Staten Island C. C. in the starring rôle, the All-New York soccer team today defeated All-Philadelphia on an ice and snow covered field at the Germantown Cricket Club, 5 goals to 4. Thompson scored three goals, aided largely by Keenan's spectacular playing on the treacherous footing.

Durant and Frosali of the Crescent A. C. and Thompson scored for the New Yorkers in the first half after the Quaker City all-stars were leading, 2 to 0, on goals by Atherton and Jimmy Gentle, the latter of Penn varsity fame. Thompson continued his good work in the second half and got another pair of goals with Atherton and Stratton scoring for Philadelphia.

The alert goal tending of Smage of the Radio Corporation A. C. prevented Philadelphia from overtaking the metropolitan team in the last five minutes:

St. John's Five Upsets Columbia in Latter's Opener; Fordham and C. C. N. Y. Win

COLUMBIA BEATEN BY ST. JOHN'S FIVE

Suffers Setback in Season's Opener, Losing to Brooklyn Team, 35 to 30.

VICTORS LEAD AT HALF-TIME

Count Heavily With Long-Range Tallies—Rothenfeld Shines for Blue and White Quintet.

Columbia's basketball team, champion of the Intercollegiate League, ran into a startling upset last night when the St. John's five came over from Brooklyn and defeated the Blue and White, 35 to 30, in the opening game of the season on Morningside Heights.

The Brooklynites led at half time, 17 to 12, and set such a fast pace in the second half that Columbia was lagging behind by eleven points with only a few minutes to go. Rothenfeld then electrified the 1,000 spectators by caging two shots from the middle of the court and Madden added a foul goal, but the rally died aborning when the whistle blew to end the game.

Long-distance shooting by St. John's sent Columbia down to defeat. The athletes from across the bridge showed uncanny aim from the middle of the floor. The Columbia defense stopped them short of the goal but the Brooklyn team won by its wonderful shots over the heads of the Blue and White defenders.

It was a fast game, marked by close guarding in the later stages. At the beginning Columbia was ragged in its passing and teamwork, but Coach Meenan's team began to pick up speed in the second half. The Blue and White rallied at the start of this period and came within a point of the visitors, but with the score 22-22, Seiffert, Feeney and Freeman each shot a field goal and Columbia fell far to the rear never to catch the flying Brooklyn five.

Columbia led, 8 to 4, in the early moments of the game but St. John's overcame this advantage and was leading by five points at half time.

Coach Meenan started with three members of last year's championship outfit—Rothenfeld, Madden and Lorch. Courtney was at centre and Rieger, the football star, at forward.

Freeman, with six goals, and Feeney, with four, starred for St. John's. Lorch's shooting and guarding were the feature of Columbia's play.

The line-up:

ST. JOHN'S (35).		COLUMBIA (30).
Flanagan	L.F.	Rothenfeld
Seiffert	F.	Rieger
Freeman	C.	Courtney
Feeney	L.G.	Madden
Schulman	R.G.	Lorch

Goals from field—St. John's: Flanagan 4, Seiffert 2, Freeman 6, Feeney 4. Columbia: Rothenfeld 4, Courtney 1, Lorch 5, Smith 1. Goals from foul—St. John's: Seiffert 1, Feeney 1, Schulman 1. Columbia: Rothenfeld 1, Courtney 3, Madden 1, Lorch 1. Substitutions—St. John's: Gallagher for Schulman. Columbia: Smith for Rieger, Potter for Courtney. Referee—Tobey, Savage School. Umpire—Murray, A. A. U. Time of halves—20 minutes.

DARTMOUTH REPULSES MAINE QUINTET, 35-23

Hein and Vossler Excel for Green, Which Shows Punch With Regulars in Action.

Special to The New York Times.

HANOVER, N. H., Dec. 11.—Dartmouth scored its second victory of the basketball season tonight, defeating the University of Maine, 35 to 23. The Dartmouth regulars played good basketball, but the team lost its power when the first-string combination was broken up by substitutions.

In the absence of Acting Captain Dey, Heap led the Green quintet, while Vossler, a sophomore, held down Dey's place at left forward. Hein, who started at forward, but shifted to centre shortly after the game started, led the scoring of the winning team with four goals from the floor and two fouls. Vossler scored eight points.

Hobbs starred for Maine with four field goals. In the first half Hobbs made three goals in rapid succession, which gave Maine a one-point lead at the time. They were unable to hold it, however, and did not get to the front again.

The line-up:

DARTMOUTH (35).		MAINE (23).
Hein	L.F.	Kamenkavitz
Kets	R.F.	Hobbs
Oliver	C.	Branscom
Heap	L.G.	Durell

FORDHAM DEFEATS UPSALA FIVE, 60-14

Maroon Seconds Start Action and Gain Early Edge, Which Regulars Easily Increase.

LEAD AT HALF-TIME, 24-7

Victors Show Strong Defense, Allowing Only Five Field Goals to East Orange Team.

The Fordham University basketball team won its second victory of the season last night at the Fordham gymnasium by swamping the Upsala College quintet by 60 to 14. The East Orange aggregation was outclassed from the opening whistle. The second team which started the fray led the visitors by a substantial margin before the regulars were sent into the game.

Frank Dougherty and Nick Landers shared the honors with Johnny White and Jim Zakszewski. Practically every man on the squad was used during the contest and every man that saw action had a hand in the scoring, with two exceptions.

Coach Ed Kelleher opened fire on the Upsala team with his second team. With the count, 12 to 7, in favor of the reserves, the Maroon mentor mentor rushed in his first team which immediately doubled the score while holding the opposition scoreless until the half ended. The half time score favored Fordham, 24 to 7.

In the second half, the varsity ran the count up to 38 to 7, before Sjostrom dropped in the ball for the initial Upsala tally of the half. Then Kelleher removed his regulars and Upsala finally moved its total up to 14. However, led by Landers and Sweetman, the replacements pushed the score up to 60.

Throughout the contest, the Fordham defense was entirely too strong for the Upsala team. The East Orange team scored only three field goals in the first half, and two in the final period. Every ball which was netted from the floor by the visitors was dropped from midfield.

The Maroon passing and shooting showed a marked improvement since the exhibition against St. Stephen's on Wednesday.

The line-up:

FORDHAM (60).		UPSALA (14).
Schneider	L.F.	Forsberg

GERMANTOWN ACADEMY WINS

Gains Early Lead and Downs Lawrenceville by 32 to 25.

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCEVILLE, N. J., Dec. 11.—The Germantown Academy five swept the Lawrenceville quintet to its second defeat here this afternoon, 32 to 25. Lawrenceville seemed unable to get going during the first half and Germantown swept down the floor almost at will, scoring 18 points and missing many shots by narrow margins.

The line-up:

GERMANTOWN (32).		LAWRENCEVILLE (25).
White	L.F.	Marshall
Lawrence	R.F.	Bodine
Heft	C.	Warren
Cooney	L.G.	Williams
Steir	R.G.	Herrick

Substitutions—Lawrenceville: Colgan for Bodine, Bodine for Colgan, Hubbord for Marshall, Colgan for Bodine, Marshall for Hubbard. Germantown—Skirn for White, White for Skirn, Skirn for Cooney, Wilkinson for White, Boger for Steir.

Newark Wins at Atlanta, 100-0.

PENN TURNS BACK DREXEL FIVE, 39-26

Davenport and Goldblatt Put Quakers in Front After Half-Time Tie.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 11.—Pennsylvania scored a 39 to 26 victory over the Drexel quintet at Weightman Hall tonight. The Red and Blue with a new team on the floor at the start of the game was slow in getting started, and at half time the score was knotted at 16-all.

A capacity crowd of more than 2,000 witnessed the strong comeback when the veteran Penn players, Davenport and Goldblatt, came onto the floor in the second half.

Tom Magner, right guard of the Penn team, was the high scorer of the contest for the winners, tallying three times from the floor and twice from the penalty mark.

Ed McNicol, Penn coach, used sixteen players in scoring the decisive victory over Drexel.

Al Hey was the outstanding performer for the losers and tied Magner for high scoring honors by tallying four field goals, mostly long shots from the centre of the court. It was two of these shots just in the final minutes of the first half that enabled the visitors to end the first session on even terms with Penn.

The line-up:

Lorms	L.F.	Hey
Connell	R.F.	Schwartz
Beeker	C.	Dobbins
Lakaswitz	L.G.	Tucker

SEVENTH REGIMENT SCORES AT TENNIS

Defeats Brooklyn Indoor T. C., 6 to 2, Fred Anderson Winning First Match.

The Seventh Regiment Tennis Club defeated the Brooklyn Indoor Tennis Club at the Seventh Regiment Armory yesterday afternoon by the score of 6 matches to 2. The Seventh Regiment won five of the six singles matches and divided the two doubles encounters. A third doubles engagement was called off with each team having won a set.

Fred Anderson came from behind to win the opening match with Reginald Talmage, the No. 1 man for the Brooklynites. He dropped the first set, 10 to 8, but came back to win the next two, 6—2 and 6—3. Merritt Cutler, captain of the Seventh Regiment team, won his match with Ted Le Gros in straight sets, 9—7 and 6—3.

The summaries:

Singles—Fred C. Anderson, Seventh Regiment, defeated R. Talmage, Brooklyn, 8—10, 6—2, 6—3; Merritt Cutler, Seventh Regiment, defeated Ted Le Gros, Brooklyn, 9—7, 6—3; W. C. C. N. Y. FENCERS BAND.

Lavender Expects to Enter Team in Intercollegiate Tourney.

A fencing team has been organized at City College and it is expected that a team will be developed in time to enter the intercollegiates.

The club has at its helm Saul Elkins who at one time was captain of a Townsend Harris team and Arthur Kennicutt, a member of a Y. M. C. A. fencing team. Both men at present are acting in the capacity of coaches but it is expected that a professional will be obtained within the next few weeks.

with Article 33, Section D of the Rules of the International Lawn Tennis Federation."

The rest of the meeting was taken up with the routine reading of reports from the committees and the preparing of the business for the annual meeting in February.

Those present at the meeting were Jones W. Mersereau, President of the U. S. L. T. A.; Julian S. Myrick, Chairman of the Davis Cup Committee; Holcombe Ward, George W. Wightman of Boston, Louis B. Dailey, Walter L. Pate, R. Norris Williams 2d, Paul W. Gibbons, William P. Rowland and Samuel Collom, all of Philadelphia; George T. Adee, Louis J. Carruthers, William Fischer, Henry W. Slocum, Watson Washburn, James O. Stewart of Chicago, and Royal Leighton of New Haven.

The New York State junior boys' and girls' tennis championships will be awarded to the West Side Tennis Club if the recommendation of the Junior Committee of the New York State Association made in its annual report by Chairman Louis B. Dailey Jr. is carried out.

Other recommendations made are that the metropolitan junior, boys' and girls' championships be awarded to the Briarcliff Lodge Tennis and Sports Club and that the N. Y. L. T. A. be officially represented in the national doubles by four junior entrants and one boy team.

The report of Dailey shows that junior play in New York State went through its most successful season during the 1926 campaign. More than forty junior tournaments were held, twelve of them up-State and the entry lists in some of them exceeded forty players. The record of the metropolitan representatives has been particularly good this year, Dailey points out.

The metropolitan team won every one of its matches played with Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Schenectady. It also won the intersectional team match with the Middle States Association by 6 matches to 3, and in the national championships at Chicago Julius Seligson reached the final round of the junior tournament while Sidney Wood Jr. was a finalist in the boys' championship and won the doubles crown with Warren F. Coen of Kansas City.

NAVY FENCERS LOSE TO SALTUS EXPERTS

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 11. — The swordsmen of the J. Sanford Saltus Fencing Club of New York had an easy time with the Midshipmen this afternoon, winning with all three weapons, the total score being 17 to 5. Dow, one of the leading epee experts in the United States, and Twyeffort engaged in eight contests each, using all three weapons. The former won six of his eight contests, while Bloomer, who was intercollegiate champion with the foils when at Columbia a few years back, took five of his six bouth. He lost an epee contest with Bennett, present intercollegiate champion with that weapon.

The Navy made its best showing with the épée, which it lost four to five. The visitors took all nine bouts with the foils and three of four with the sabre.

The summaries:

Foils — Twyeffort defeated Zahm, 5—3; Bloomer defeated Overfelt, 5—1; Dow defeated Wait, 5—3; Bloomer defeated Zahm, 5—2; Dow defeated Overfelt, 5—2; Twyeffort defeated Rice, 5—0; Dow defeated Zahm, 5—3; Bloomer defeated Archer, 5—0; Twyeffort defeated Overfelt, 5—4.

STUYVESANT FIVE CONQUERS HAAREN

Takes Opening P. S. A. L. Clash, 27-18, Limiting Losers to Three Field Baskets.

XAVIER TAKES 7TH IN ROW

Turns Back Brooklyn Cathedral by 19-13 Count—Ethical Culture and Collegiate Quintets Win.

The Stuyvesant High basketball team gained its third consecutive victory yesterday afternoon at the Stuyvesant gymnasium by defeating the Haaren High five, 27 to 18. The game opened the P. S. A. L. season for both teams. The defensive play of the Red and Blue was of a high order, Haaren tallying only three field goals during the entire game. Wasserman dropped in one in the first half and Kartes tallied twice in the final half.

The game was a fast contest, with fouls frequently called by the officials. Two-thirds of the Haaren points were registered by throws from the foul line. Wasserman, Haaren star, tallied six points on free throws. Romney and Smith were the Stuyvesant mainstays. The score at half time was 13 to 7 in Stuyvesant's favor.

The line-up:

STUYVESANT (27).		HAAREN (18).
Lancaster	L.F.	Gallagher
Romney	R.F.	Jones

Substitutions—Brooklyn Cathedral: Clemings for Roesch, Glynn for Graham, Sullivan for Donnelly.

Referee—Dandrigan. Time of periods—8 minute quarters.

Loyola High Beaten.

The Ethical Culture five won a close game from the Loyola High quintet by the score of 20 to 17, at the Ethical Culture courts yesterday afternoon. It was a rough game, twenty-nine fouls being called. However, neither team was able to capitalize on this to any extent, as only eleven fouls were netted. Piper starred for Ethical while Bowe starred for Loyola. The score at half time was 10 to 9 in favor of Ethical.

The line-up:

ETHICAL CUL. (20).		LOYOLA HIGH (17).
Lewis	L.F.	Bowe
Piper	R.F.	Bowe
Levi	C.	Bowe
Bernheim	L.G.	Bowe

Referee—Ferguson, N. Y. U. Time of quarters—6 minutes.

CITY COLLEGE FIVE DOWNS DICKINSON

Lavender Quintet Triumphs, 15-8, After Hard Battle on Home Court.

RASKIN STAR OF CONTEST

Scores Four Field Goals and Cages Two Fouls—Capacity Crowd Sees Contest.

Scoring its third successive triumph of the season, the City College quintet turned back Dickinson by a 15-8 count in the Lavender gymnasium last night, before a capacity crowd of 1,200, and thereby avenged a defeat suffered at the hands of the Pennsylvania five a year ago. The visitors used their customary zone system of defense play, and the second half, which started with the Lavender leading 11-7, saw only one field goal scored in the entire twenty minutes of play.

Tubby Raskin, who played at left guard for the winners, was the individual scoring star of the contest, tossing in four field baskets and netting two shots from the foul line. All of his field goals were shot from under the basket and his final successful shot was made in the last second of the game, just before the whistle blew.

Dickinson jumped into the lead at the start when S. Goldberg, the visitors' centre, netted a fairly long shot for two points. Raskin, however, soon got busy, caging the sphere for the basket that tied the count at 2—2 and then putting the Lavender into the lead with another field goal. C. C. N. Y. led at half time by 11—7.

The second half was different. Dickinson's husky players, still using the zone system of defense, stayed down near their basket, each man in his assigned sector, and failed to make any sorties into Lavender territory. City College, satisfied to hold its lead, also stayed in its own half of the court for the most part; merely passing the ball back and forth. The result was that only five points were scored during the entire half, S. Goldberg and J. Goldberg, the rival centres, counting on fouls and Raskin doing likewise and then Raskin caging his final second goal.

In a preliminary game the City College freshmen rallied to take Concordia Prep into camp, 23-21. Concordia led at half time, 11—5. Stindell of the yearlings and Block of Concordia starred.

The line-up:

CITY COLLEGE (15).		DICKINSON (8).
Rubinstein	L.F.	Sweely
Liss	R.F.	Gallagher
J. Goldberg	C.	Goldberg
Raskin	L.G.	Potamkin
Hirsch	R.G.	Bair

Goals from field—City College: Raskin (4), Liss. Dickinson: S. Goldberg (2). Goals from foul—City College: Raskin (3), J. Goldberg (3), Rubinstein. Dickinson: Sweely, Gallagher, S. Goldberg, Tripician.

Substitutions—City College: Lechner for Liss, Liss for Lechner, Dickinson: Tripician for Sweely, Sweely for Gallagher.

Referee—Tom Thorpe, Columbia. Umpire—R. H. Hastings, Cornell. Time of periods—20 minutes.

STEVENS FIVE WINS.

Triumphs Over Rensselaer Team at Troy by 41 to 28.

Special to The New York Times.

TROY, N. Y., Dec. 11.—After a fast and furious first half, in which Stevens led 23-19, Stevens Institute came through with a rush in the second half and defeated Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in the opening game of the college basketball season here tonight by a score of 41 to 28.

The line-up:

STEVENS (41).		RENSELAER (28).
Aschoff	R.F.	Libery

MONTCLAIR QUINTET WINS.

Overwhelms Exchange Club, 69-24, but Can't Stop Stutchberry.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Dec. 11.—The Montclair A. C. basketball team opened its season here tonight with a 69-24 victory over the Exchange Club team of New York. While the dazzling teamwork of the local team bewilded the visitors, it could not dim the individual brilliance of Stutchberry, the Exchange centre, who scored eleven field goals and two foul goals. Stutchberry was the outstanding figure in a game which included such stars as Hillenbach, formerly of N. Y. U.; Hyman, once of Princeton; King, formerly of Wesleyan, and others. Hyman and King each scored six field goals and two foul goals.

The line-up:

MONTCLAIR A. C. (69).		EXCHANGE CLUB (24).
Hillenbach	L.F.	Johnson
Hyman	R.F.	Stutchberry
Hock	C.	Taylor
Richards	L.G.	Hyland
Cook	R.G.	Hyland

Goals from field—Montclair: Hyman (6), King (6), Caldwell (3), Hillenbach (3), Richards (2), Crawford (2), Drews, Hock, Cook. Exchange: Stutchberry (11), Maguire (3), Johnson, Hyland.

Goals from foul—Montclair: Hyman (2), King (2), Hattersley (2), Hillenbach, Drews, Hock, Caldwell. Exchange: Stutchberry (2), Johnson (2).

Substitutions—Montclair: Drews for Hillenbach, King for Hyman, Hattersley for Hock, Crawford for Richards, Pratt for Crawford, Caldwell for Cook. Exchange: Barnett for Taylor, Gannon for Barnett.

Referee—Fisher, Orange. Time of halves—20 minutes.

Yale Quintet Bows to Rhode Island and Princeton Triumphs Over Lehigh Team

RHODE ISLAND FIVE UPSETS YALE, 29-26

Visitors Lead Almost Continuously, but Elis Deadlock the Score Twice.

FOUL GOALS DECIDE GAME

Eli Team Misses 10 Out of 12 Tries, While Opponents Shoot All —Haire and Simmen Star.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 11.—Yale tonight lost its first basketball game of the season, Rhode Island State College outscoring the Elis, 29 to 26, in a closely fought match. Although the visitors led almost continuously, they had the count midway in the first half 10-10 and again in the second at 18-18. The visitors obtained the three-point margin of their victory by deftly caging all of their goals after fouls, while the Yale foul goal throwers failed ten out of twelve.

Captain Haire of Rhode Island starred for the visitors with seven goals from the floor. Simmen, Yale's star, outpointed him with seven goals from the floor and one goal from foul, his fifteen points proving to be the individual high total of the evening. Captain Carmody's defensive work excelled for Yale.

The line-up:

R. I. STATE (29).		YALE (26).
Ward	L.F.	Ward
Hill	R.F.	McNulty
Haire	C.	Simmen
Billhardt	L.G.	Carmody
Simmen	R.G.	Reeves

Goals from field—R. I. State: Haire 7, Ward 2, Hurwitz 2; Yale: McNulty, Fodder 2, Ward, Billhardt, Simmen 7, Carmody. Goals from foul—R. I. State: Ward, Simmen.

Substitutions—R. I. State: Fleming for Hill; Yale: Fodder for McNulty, Billhardt for Ward, Brockelman for Reeves, Reeves for Brockelman.

Brooklyn Club's Second String Men Get Into Action in Easily Won Contest.

The Crescent Athletic Club basketball team opened another victory last night when it defeated the Cooper Union quintet, 46 to 19, on the Crescent court. The Brooklyn club men jumped into an early lead at the start of the game, and were leading by 24 to 11 at half time. In the second half many Crescent substitutes were used at various times, notwithstanding which the Blue Homers almost doubled their total, while Cooper Union added only eight more points.

Raymond, Rhodes, Keating, Mannix, Provost and Crabtree all starred for Crescent. Raymond and Rhodes made most points for their team, each making three field goals and a foul goal. Muller, the Cooper Union centre, was the high scorer of the game. He counted for five field goals and two foul goals.

The line-up:

CRESCENT A.C. (46)		COOPER UNION (19).
Keating	L.F.	Lewis
Provost	R.F.	Muller
Raymond	C.	Muller
Rhodes	L.G.	Wood
Crabtree	R.G.	Colvin

Goals from field—Crescents: Raymond 3, Rhodes 3, Lynch 2, Kurtz 2, Provost 2, Crabtree 2, Keating 1, Mannix 1, Marmelstein, Murray. Cooper Union: Muller 5, Colvin 2, Muller. Goals from foul: Crescents: Keating 3, Rhodes 2, Pepp, Raymond, Rhodes. Cooper Union: Muller 2, Muller.

Substitutions—Crescents: Pepp for Keating, Lynch for Pepp, Van Deusen for Kurtz, Kurtz for Van Deusen, Munser for Provost, Provost for Munser, Munser for Crabtree, Crabtree for Provost, Rhodes for Raymond, Raymond for Rhodes, Jones for Munser. Cooper Union: Craven for Lewis, Spinelli for Muller, Muller for Colvin.

BROWN FIVE TRIUMPHS.

Defeats Boston University, 43-36—Visitors' Defense Strong.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 11.—Brown defeated Boston University, 43 to 36, in a closely contested basketball game on the Boston University court tonight, holding a narrow lead through the greater part of the contest. Brown's superiority on defense was the deciding factor.

Lou Cohen, Boston Captain, scored the first goal after 30 seconds of play and tallied again in the next minute or two of play. The score at half time was 26 to 13 in favor of Brown.

Brown opened the second half with a rush, scoring eight points before Boston University counted. Brown's five-man defense was practically impenetrable in the closing moments of play.

The line-up:

BROWN (43).		BOSTON UNIV. (36).
Heller	L.F.	Cohen
Frost	R.F.	O'Brien
Heffernan	C.	Cotter
H. Heller	L.G.	Betgood

the Italian, weakened and were left in the ruck.

McNamara and Linari were touching off at the head of the Eighth Avenue turn when they collided and in going down brought Winter with them. Winter was unhurt and picking himself up, walked off to mount a fresh wheel. McNamara and Linari lay stretched out. The gong rang out the emergency signal and the crowd was hushed. McNamara, lying prone on the track, gradually and with painful effort, raised himself to a sitting position.

He limped off and the next the crowd saw of him he was astride his wheel, before Linari had been assisted to his feet to hobble off to his track bunk. The doctor had time only to bandage Linari's painfully bruised left shoulder when another jam was on and the big Italian was out to the relief of the fighting ironman.

When quiet was restored it was announced that McNamara and Linari and Georgetti and his partner, Belloni, had lapped the field in a terrific jam which ended with McNamara and Linari and Winter on the floor. Then McNamara and Linari set themselves to the task of preserving their advantage in points and succeeded through some of the most daring, sensational and thrilling riding a six-day race team ever provided.

The monotony of the riding preceding the last hour was relieved by sporadic spurts by Dinale which, however, proved to be but flashes. Some real excitement came at 9:15 o'clock when spectators offered juicy premiums for mile sprints. One of $200 caused a mild ripple of excitement and was won by Goosens in a terrific closing burst of speed at the mile.

Immediately after, the riders were off on another mile sprint, this time for $100 offered by a spectator. Tom Bello won this prize and started out as if he would regain one of the five laps he, with his riding mate, Hill, trailed the field.

Getting through on the pole three-quarters of a lap from the end of the mile Goosens came back at 9:30 to capture a $50 prize offered by a spectator for a mile sprint.

Tony Beckman rode from in front to win a prize of $100 offered for a sprint at 9:40 fighting off a determined bid for the prize by Garrison, after having previously killed off Dave Lands, when the Irvington rider essayed to jump the field. Georgetti out-rode Goosens for a $100 prize which sent the riders over the saucer at a dizzy pace a few minutes later.

Two Tumble in Spill.

One of the most exciting riding spasms of the night came near being disastrous, for two riders escaped with their lives in a tumble at the height of a jam. Winter and Stockholm started the jam after the ninth sprint and carried it through the tenth, eleventh and part of the twelfth, when it was abruptly halted with the team close to three-quarters of a lap ahead of the rest of the field.

Lands and Stockelynch went down in a heap on the Eighth Avenue turn of the track. The emergency bell rang its signal for the second time in the night. Lands was the first to stir and give signs of life. Then Stockelynch rolled painfully over as track attendants administered to him, and soon he regained his feet and was assisted to his track cot. He was unable to return for the sprints.

It was announced that during the jam ended by the McNamara-Linari-Winter spill the teams of McNamara and Linari and Belloni and Georgetti had lapped the field.

The spill came at 10:4, and the race was halted with the announcement that when the grind resumed there would be an additional twenty minutes of riding. Linari, however, got back into the thick of the speeding when another short-lived jam started, with the completion of the eighteenth spurt.

Results of the final sprints:

First Sprint—Linari, Garrison, Walker, Goosens.

Second Sprint — Georgetti, Bello, Beckman, Wambst.

Third Sprint—Winter, Hill, Lacquehay, Garrison.

Fourth Sprint—Petri, Stockelynch, McBeath, Beckman.

Fifth Sprint—Linari, Stockholm, Stockelynch, Georgetti.

Sixth Sprint—McNamara, Winter, Belloni, Goosens.

Seventh Sprint—Linari, Belloni, Lacquehay, Beckman.

Eighth Sprint—Grimm, Petri, McNamara, Stockholm.

Ninth Sprint—Winter, McBeath, Lands, Bello.

Tenth Sprint—Winter, Belloni, Linari, Wambst.

Eleventh Sprint—Winter, Beckman, McNamara, Georgetti.

Twelfth sprint—Beckman, Goosens, Stockholm, Petri.

Thirteenth sprint—Winter, McNamara, Georgetti, Wambst.

Fourteenth — McNamara, Belloni, Wambst, Winter.

Fifteenth — McNamara, Belloni, Wambst, Winter.

Sixteenth — Belloni, Wambst, Stockholm, McNamara.

Seventeenth—Belloni, Lacquehay, McNamara, Stockholm.

Eighteenth Sprint—Petri, Bello, Belloni, McNamara.

Nineteenth — Belloni, Petri, Linari, Stockholm.

Twentieth—McNamara, Bello, Georgetti, Lands.

Twenty-first—Linari, Belloni, Lands, Lacquehay.

Twenty-second—McNamara, Dinale, McBeath, Stockholm.

Twenty-third — Belloni, Stockholm, Lands, McNamara.

Twenty-fourth—Winter, Lacquehay, Linari, Lands.

Twenty-fifth—Petri, Winter, McNamara, Garrison.

Ten combinations were on the track at the conclusion of the afternoon sprints, four teams having withdrawn from the grind. The field, including the four leading teams, was divided into five divisions.

One lap back of the four deadlocked combinations winging along in front was the team of Wambst and Lacquehay. Petri and Lands were three laps back of the leaders and five circuits to the bad were Bello and Hill, Walker and Beckman and McBeath and Grimm. Eight laps in arrears and taking up the tail end of the field was the team of Garrison and Dinale.

The field had accounted for 301 stolen laps at the conclusion of yesterday afternoon's sprints. The record for this phase of the grind is 303, made in the last Chicago race, which was won by Petri and Lands. The laps gained by the respective teams up to and including the afternoon sprints follow:

McNamara and Linari, 27; Goosens and Stockelynch, 27; Winter and Stockholm, 27; Belloni and Georgetti, 27; Wambst and Lacquehay, 26; Petri and Lands, 24; Bello and Hill, 22; Walker and Beckman, 22; McBeath and Grimm, 22; Coles and Garrison, 22; Dinale and Bestetti, 19; Wynsdau and Coburn, 15; Taylor and Hanley, 11. Spencer and Goullet, 10.

Beniamino Gigli, Metropolitan Opera House tenor, will present the winners of the race with two silver loving cups and a dinner will be tendered the winning team and the Italian riders of the race today.

PETRONE BEATS MONTREAL.

Gains Decision in Walker A. C. Main Bout—Elkins Defeats Dempsey.

Dominick Petrone of Harlem won the decision from Young Montreal of Providence in a fast ten-round bout, the feature at the New Walker A. C., last night. Petrone proved too clever for his aggressive opponent. The victor weighed 122 pounds and his rival one pound less. In the semi-final Eddie Elkins of Harlem, 132, won the decision from Bud Dempsey, 131, of Yorkville.

Both opening four rounders ended in first-round knockouts, Joe Barbara of the west side stopping E. Salacco of the Bronx and Erick Petersen of New Rochelle halting Willie Brown of Harlem. In the six rounders, Connie Holmes, 121½, Harlem, defeated Sam Sober, 128½, Bronx, and Tommy Grady, 124, Yorkville, defeated Mickey Durano, 119, east side.

HUNTER TEAM OPENS SEASON SATURDAY

Basketball Campaign to Open With N. Y. U.—Most of the Squad Are Veterans.

The Hunter College basketball team which has been in training since Oct. 1, will open its season this Saturday when the N. Y. U. girls' team will oppose the Hunter sextet at the Hunter gym. Six games have been scheduled to date—N. Y. U., St. Joseph's and Savage being listed for home-and-home series.

Coach Wilhelmina Meissner, who is starting her second year at the helm of the Hunter sextet will have an experienced team this campaign. Last year most of the players were not familiar with the court game, but the one year's experience that was gained last season together with the teamwork acquired then will enable them to put forth a combination which is expected to make a very presentable showing.

Of the six regulars of the last campaign, four have returned and the places of the other two have been filled by substitutes from last year. Captain Julia Ibear and Olive Huber graduated last June, but their positions have been filled by Frances Holsten and Lilian McGowan.

Two veteran forwards remain and both are star performers. Captain Hazel Johnson and Kay Meehan will perform in these posts, while Sophie Mins and Rose Koenig will be their replacements. The centre is Lilian McGowan. Evelyn Mahood is the side-centre, with Rose Aginsky as her alternate.

Frances Holsten and Evelyn Bleul are two reliable guards who will have available as reserves Pearl Satlein, Bernice Krauter and Rose Peisner.

TRIP FOR ST. JOHN'S FIVE.

Team Will Play Union Wednesday and the Army Saturday.

The St. John's College quintet plays its first out-of-town game Wednesday against Union College at Schenectady. Coach Cremny will have little time to send his charges through practice, as the Army will be played on the West Point floor the following Saturday.

The team will finish the month on the home court, meeting Middlebury, St. Francis and Niagara in the order named.

HAVANA RACE DATES FOR STAR CLASS SET

International Fleet to Sail for Bacardi Cup and Other Prizes Beginning Jan. 27.

Dates for the annual Mid-Winter International Star Class series at Havana have been set by the Havana Yacht Club, according to an announcement here yesterday by President George Elder of the International Star Class Yacht Racing Association. Racing will begin on Thursday, Jan. 27, with the first of three contests for the Bacardi Cup and will continue each day after that until Feb. 3.

The Bacardi Trophy, a handsome annual prize given each year by the Bacardi family of Cuba, for Star boat competition, is perhaps the most important of the trophies to be sailed for in the Mid-Winter regatta. It will be open to all boats in the international fleet. Next in importance will be the Mid-Winter Challeng Cup, for which there will also be a series of three races.

This is not an open event, the prize being sailed for by one boat from each fleet represented. The Mid-Winter Trophy is a very large silver cup and was captured last January by Ernest Ratsey, one of the crack Long Island skippers, with the Irex IV. Captain Ratsey brought the trophy North and it was exhibited at the Larchmont Yacht Club. As it is a challenge cup it must now be returned and sailed for again.

The complete schedule of the Cuban Star Class series follows:

Jan. 27—First race for Bacardi Cup; 28, first race for Mid-Winter Trophy; 29, second race for Bacardi Cup; 30, open for regatta or special races; 31, second race for Mid-Winter Trophy.

Feb. 1—Final race for Bacardi Cup; 2, final race for Mid-Winter Trophy; 3, international team race; free-for-all race for boats not on either team.

FIRST HALF SCORING WINS FOR THE NAVY

Midshipmen Beat Lafayette, 23-16, Leading by 18 to 4 in Initial Period.

BUSH SHINES FOR LOSERS

Gets Half of Quintet's Points After It Tallies Only Once From Floor in Opening Session.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 11.—Taking a commanding lead in the first half, the Navy basketball team won from Lafayette here this afternoon by 23 to 16, though the Midshipmen were slowed up in the second half and the visitors cut down the lead greatly.

Lafayette scored only once from the floor in the first half on a shot by Leisening, and the score at the end of that period favored the Navy by 18 to 4.

Miller played a particularly good game for the Navy, scoring three goals from the floor and the same number from the foul line.

Lafayette's spurt in the second half was due to an all-around stronger defense and the good shooting of Bush, who netted three field goals and two from the foul line for half of his team's points in the closing period.

The line-up:

NAVY (23).		LAFAYETTE (16).
Mill	R.F.	Bush
Howard	L.F.	Leisening
F. S. Smith	C.	Atkinson
Hamilton	R.G.	McGuire

RUTGERS FIVE WINS FROM TEMPLE, 31-27

Goals by Alton and Roherbach in Closing Minutes Decide Game Before 1,500.

BATTLE KEEN THROUGHOUT

Rival Teams Never More Than Four Points Apart—Freshmen Lose to George Washington High.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 11.—Before a crowd of 1,500, Rutgers defeated Temple University in basketball here today by a score of 31 to 27. The game was characterized by excellent floor work and sensational shooting by both quintets and at no time during the forty minutes of play did more than four points separate the teams.

Alton, former freshman star who was graduated to the varsity, was the star of the game with eight baskets to his credit. Ben Stakowski, who was expected to count heavily for Temple was closely guarded by Faltings and was able to score only three times from the floor.

The first half ended with Rutgers one point in the lead, but after the home team had increased this by another two points, Temple rallied and brought the count to 16-all. Until the last two minutes it was anybody's game, but two long shots by Alton and Roherbach decided the issue.

In a preliminary game George Washington High School of New York defeated the Rutgers freshmen, 45 to 40. Both teams showed good floor work, but the freshmen were off in shooting and could not stop Heinamann's sensational baskets from midcourt.

The line-ups:

Mark	R.F.	Stakowski
Alton	L.F.	Wooley
Roherbach	C.	Jepson
Faltings	R.G.	Schatz

MANHATTAN LOSES TO WILLIAMS FIVE

Bows by 50-39 Count, Shumway Scoring 6 Field and 8 Foul Goals for Winners.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Dec. 11.—Williams opened its basketball season here tonight by defeating Manhattan College, 50 to 39, in a well-played game. The Purple five took the lead in the first few minutes of play and was never headed. At half time the score was 27 to 17.

Shumway was the high scorer of the contest, registering six floor baskets and eight foul goals for Williams. Zinn and Sterling also displayed accurate basket shooting, while Cohalan was Manhattan's best bet. Many fouls were called during the game and both sides lost players by the personal foul route.

The line-up:

WILLIAMS (50).		MANHATTAN (39).
Shumway	L.F.	Cohalan
Brown	R.F.	Keber
Zinn	C.	Maloney
Bethan	L.G.	Horan
Wright	R.G.	Hayes

Goals from field—Williams: Shumway 6, Brown 2, Zinn 3, Sterling 3, Bethan. Manhattan: Cohalin 7, Keber 3, Hindecliffe, Maloney, Whalen, Hayes 2. Goals from foul—Williams: Shumway 8, Brown 8, Zinn, Sterling 2, Bethan. Manhattan: Keber 2, Hindecliffe 2, Whalen 2, Hayes 2, Ryan.

Substitutions—Williams: Fowle for Shumway, Curtis for Brown, Sterling for Zinn. Manhattan: Hindecliffe for Keber, Whalen for Maloney, Ryan for Hayes.

Referee—Sullivan, Seton Hall. Time of halves—20 minutes.

TIGER FIVE WINS FROM LEHIGH, 26-20

Last Period Rally Brings Princeton Home in Front After Trailing Opponents.

HALF-TIME SCORE IS 15-13

Foot, Tiger Centre, Is Star of a Fast, Rough Game, Which Is Close Throughout.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 11.—A last period rally for Princeton brought the Tiger basketball team into the lead for a 26 to 20 win over the Lehigh quintet here tonight. Princeton and Lehigh fought through forty minutes of a fast and rough basketball game in which neither team led by more than six points at any time.

The Tiger team abandoned the huddle system of giving signals when the two centres divided honors about equally in getting the jump from centre. Practice in the huddle will continue but Wittmer will not unleash the Western system of giving signals until he meets a team over which Si. Foot can get the jump.

Although the Tiger centre was not too sure of himself at the tip-off, he was the star of the game. Princeton trailed at half-time, 13 to 15.

Two scores followed rapidly, as Lehigh kept the lead, 17 to 15. The turning point of the game came when Foot faked a pass to Alexander, turning neatly about his guard to sink the tying basket. From then on Princeton took the offensive and Lehigh passed up several nice opportunities for scores.

The line-up:

PRINCETON (26).		LEHIGH (20).
McCabe	R.F.	Smith
Hendricks	L.F.	C. Schaub
Foot	C.	E. Schaub
Alexander	R.G.	Hesse
Miles	L.G.	Billmeyer

Scoring—Princeton—Goals from field: McCabe (3), Hendricks, Foot (3), Evans (2), Alexander. Goals from foul: Hendricks, Foot, Evans, McCabe (2), Miles. Lehigh—Goals from field: Smith (3), C. Schaub (2), Billmeyer, E. Schaub. Goals from foul: C. Schaub (3), Billmeyer, Smith, Lister.

Substitutions—Princeton: Gartner for McCabe, Evans for Foot, Elliot for Alexander, Foot for Hendricks, McCabe for Gartner, Alexander for Elliot, Hendricks for Evans, Gartner for Hendricks. Lehigh: Lister for Hesse.

Referee—Kinney, Yale. Umpire—Ogden, Swarthmore. Time of halves—20 minutes.

PRINCETON FRESHMEN LOSE.

Boys' High Five of Brooklyn Beats at Final Whistle, 18-16.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 11.—The Boys' High School of Brooklyn won over the Princeton freshmen on the basketball court here tonight by 18 to 16. The contest opened the Tiger yearlings' season.

The victors led at half time, 12 to 6.

The Princeton yearlings took the lead 14 to 13 near the end. Miller, shooting a foul, tied the score, and a minute later the teams were still in a deadlock, when Warshower shot the winning basket as the final whistle blew.

The line-up:

BOYS' HIGH (18).		PRINCETON FRESH (16).
Glickman	L.F.	Critchfield
Miller	R.F.	Johnston
Lefft	C.	Dickowiks
Warshower	L.G.	Kohlrast
Wolfman	R.G.	Vogt

Goals from field—Glickman 2, Goldberg, Arginsky, Wolfman 2, Warshower, Johnston 2, Dickowicks 2, Vogt 2, Wheat. Goals from foul—Warshower 4, Miller, Dickowicks, Wheat.

Substitutions—Boys' High: Goldberg for Lefft, Arginsky for Glickman, Peskowitz for Warshower, Warshower for Peskowitz, Lefft for Goldberg, Glickman for Arginsky, Goldberg for Lefft. Princeton Fresh: Wheat for Critchfield, Hendricks for Kohlrast.

Referee—Ogden, Swarthmore. Time of halves—15 minutes.

RACING IN FLORIDA GETS UNDER WAY

Meeting at Seminola Park Opens With Pigeon Wing II Taking Featured Event.

VICTOR BEATS REPUTATION

Races Down Odds-On Choice in Stretch and Pays $9.20 for $2—Lone Favorite Scores.

Special to The New York Times.

LONGWOOD, Fla., Dec. 11.—Winter racing in Florida was inaugurated this afternoon at Seminola Park, the home of the Seminola Racing Club, the meeting to continue to an indefinite date.

A large crowd was on hand to welcome the thoroughbreds in spite of threatening weather. The track was lightning fast and new records were established in every one of the seven races on the program.

Pigeon Wing II, a three year old chestnut colt which races for A. Riley, captured the Seminola Purse, a six-furlong dash, which featured the card, by a length and a half from the Harned Brothers' Reputation, the odds-on favorite of the field of eight. Deputy just outlasted the fast-closing Ball Gee for the show position. The victor ran the distance in 1:12 1-5 and paid $9.20 for $2 in the wagering.

Reputation Goes Ahead.

Jockey O. Clelland took Reputation to the front at the start and set a smart pace, which was, however, closely followed by Pigeon Wing II, and, when the former began to tire from his early exertions, C. McCrossen shot the Riley colt to him and then passed him in the stretch drive. Deputy ran in third position practically most of the way and finished in that position.

Form followers fared poorly, all except one of the favorites falling by the wayside. The only winning first choice was Fly Hawk, Maher's good two-year-old, which was a 9 to 10 choice. The son of Star Hawk and Poor Butterfly was off sluggishly but gradually crept up on the leaders and overhauled Irene Seth in the final drive. The latter succumbed to the closing burst of speed by Colleen O.

Players Get Surprise.

Dean H. surprised the players when he took the opening sprint, a five and a half furlong affair, at odds of $30.40 for $2. The son of Horace II broke on top and held away throughout. Sweetum, a long-priced field horse, and Quanah furnished the competition. Quanah forced the pace until the top of stretch where Sweetum began to close rapidly, soon passed Quanah and was gaining on the winner at the end.

Brownie Smile, flying the colors of the Oklahoma Stable, led a small band of distance runners to the wire in the sixth race at a mile and seventy yards. The victory also was something of an upset, backers of the gelding receiving over 10 to 1 on their investment. Brownie Smile was rated just off the pace set by Grand King and then came on to win the stretch battle with him, holding over a length advantage at the finish. Fire Under went wide around the turn, but held third place safely.

Scratched—Green Blades and Fayman.

Billy Witt ran as if much the best in the going. He was under stout restraint to the stretch and then drew out and won in a drive. Sun Rajah slipped through on the inside on the stretch turn and finished fast. Levoy had plenty of speed, but weakened in the last furlong. Tick Tock had no mishaps.

TURF STARS NAMED IN 8 MIAMI STAKES

MANY OWNERS NEWCOMERS

Mrs. Vanderbilt, H. P. Whitney and R. L. Gerry Will Race Thoroughbreds There First Time.

Sarazen and Peanuts are among the noted thoroughbreds that have been nominated in the stakes to be run this Winter at the Hialeah course of the Miami Jockey Club during the meeting which will begin Jan. 13. Eight stakes are scheduled and all have filled beyond expectations, both as to number and quality of the candidates, and the competition in these events promises to approach the class of the older classics of the turf.

Many stables which in the past have never participated in Winter racing have succumbed to the lure of the sport as it is presented at Miami. Among these newcomers are Mrs. Vanderbilt's Fair Stable, Robert L. Gerry, former Senator J. N. Camden of Kentucky, Harry Payne Whitney and Edward B. McLean, together with a large number of owners of less pretentious strings. The appearance of Sarazen and Peanuts has created the greatest interest in the Florida city and this has been increased by the nominations of the Whitney stars, Blondin and the prospective Derby candidates Whiskery, Afterglow, Acrostic and Fresco.

Mr. Gerry has named his game little Peanuts for two of the rich prizes, the Ormond and the Miami Cup Handicap, the latter carrying $25,000 in added money. Sarazen has been named in six of the eight stake events. He is engaged in the opening day's feature, the Biscayne Handicap at six furlongs, and will be up against a smart field. Among the 72 entries received for this event are Candy Pan, Sun Altos, Son of John, Whiskery, Witchment, Afterglow, Beaming, Fresco, Martha Washington, Atoe, Sunsard, Golden Spire and Indian Love Call.

The other races in which the fickle son of High Time may start are the St. Augustine Handicap, the Okeechobee Handicap, the Ormond Handicap, the Key West Handicap and the $25,000 Miami Cup Handicap, which will mark the close of the meeting on March 12.

Seventy-three in the St. Augustine.

Besides the seventy-two entries received for the Biscayne Handicap, there were seventy-three for the St. Augustine, sixty-five for the Ormond, seventy-four for the Okeechobee Highweight Handicap, sixty-five for the Key West, eighty for the Palm Beach two-year-old stake, seventy-eight for the Daytona and eighty-three for the Miami Cup Handicap. The list, in most cases, tops the lists of last year, on the occasion of the first running of the stakes, but those which are below the numbers of last year make up in class.

The finest set of two-year-olds which ever saw Winter racing are named in the Palm Beach, and the most fashionable stables of the country will take part in the contest. Most of the entries are unnamed at this time, but two colts from Harry Payne Whitney's farm, one by Chicle—Bonnie Broom and the other by Johren—First Flight, give an idea of class. This race also will mark the coming to the turf of a new follower in Roy Carruthers of New York, who has two fillies named, one by Ballot—Cocotte and the other by Pagan Pan—Avocado.

Some of the best known sires and dams will be represented in this stake, for every owner at the track will have an entry if the young horses go on in their training. So far every one which now is here is doing well, and, if looks count, they will be factors in the running of the big races this year.

J. Fred A. an Entry.

Among the entries for the Biscayne Handicap are: J. F. Adams's J. Fred A., H. T. Archibald's Candy Hog and Candy Pan, Audley Farm's Superfrank, Nevermore and Polly Sue, Archibald Barklie's Goldstick and Lady Inver, Bedford Farm's Catalan, H. K. Bliss's Patuxent, Bloomfield Stable's Ruane and Count Sprack, J. N. Camden's Dark Phantom and Rothermel, S. A. Cowan's Boon Companion, G. F. For the most part, the entries for the other stakes for the older horses are much the same, except that the name of Peanuts is to be found in the third big stake of the meeting, the Ormond Handicap at a mile and a sixteenth, to be run on the third Saturday of the meeting.

The two-year-old stake, the Palm Beach, which drew eighty entries, has many unnamed colts and fillies, but most every prominent stable in the country has entries which, for the most part, were sold at the Saratoga paddocks last Summer.

All of the stakes have a $5,000 added value except the Daytona, which has $10,000 added, and the Miami Cup, which has $25,000 added.

ARMY TRIO BEATS CAVALRY POLOISTS

Cadets Break Tie in the Final Period and Triumph Over 101st Riders, 9-8.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Dec. 11.—In a hard fought polo game here today the Army team defeated the 101st Cavalry 9-8. The Army first team started the contest and at the end of the third chukker was leading, 6-0. The first team easily outplayed the visitors, Butler starring on the attack with Griffith and Schwab holding down the defense in excellent manner.

In the last three chukkers the cavalry men held the edge and in the last chukker they tied the score at 8-8, only to have the cadets capture the battle in the last minute.

The line-up:

ARMY (9).	101ST CAVALRY (8).
1—Butler (Hines).	1—Marucchi.
2—Griffith (Ha'man).	2—Martenson.
Back—Schwab (Aloe).	Back—Smith.

Goals—Butler (4), Marucchi (5), Griffith (1), Martenson (1), Schwab (1), Smith (2).
Substitutions—Hines for Butler, Hackman for Griffith, Aloe for Schwab.
Referee—Lieutenant Menshaw.
Time—Six chukkers of 7½ minutes each.

National Amateur Body Approves Plans for Tourney Here.

The amateurs have been the first to recognize the possibility of the game of cushion caroms, which Charles C. Peterson of St. Louis, billiard expert, maintains is the solution to the present drive for a game to supplant 18.2 balkline. As a result of his efforts the National Association of Amateur Billiards players has approved a tournament for amateurs which will be held at the Hoppe Academy, where Peterson is making his headquarters for the present.

It is Peterson's idea, according to J. P. Allch, Secretary of the amateur body, to bring together the best skill among the amateurs for New York State honors at cushion caroms. He believes that the game is such a great leveller that players of the skill of Edgar T. Appleby and Herbert Hammer, will be forced to extend themselves against Class B experts.

AMATEURS TO BOX IN GARDEN THURSDAY

Virtually All of Leaders in District to Compete in Met. A. A. U. Contests.

Practically all of the leading amateur boxers now competing in this district have entered the invitation tournament to be held by the Metropolitan Association of the A. A. U. in Madison Square Garden on Thursday night.

Prominent among the entrants is Douglas D. Simpson, a graduate of Oxford University, who has shown impressively in two bouts since his arrival here, winning both by knockouts. He is a heavyweight and among his rivals in the coming tourney will be Rosario Boutot, the present New York State champion, and Michael Dessimoz of the Holy Name Club, winner of the heavyweight class in the last Metropolitan tourney in the Garden.

In all there will be competition in eight classes with four competitors in each class, a total of twenty-four bouts. Among the other leading entrants are Harry Elberg, Holy Name Club; Izzy Grove, Clark House A. A.; Herman Heller, Beecher's Club; Harry Lentz, L. I. K. of C.; Jack Schweitzer, Seward Gym; Henry Flaherty, Ascension Parish House; Sam Chernoff, Yorkville Boys' Club; Ed Kennedy, Holy Name Club; Manny Marcus, Foxdale A. C.; Ed Pfister, N. Y. Eve. H. S.; Ray Bates, Holy Name Club; Dominick Oral, Community Centre No. 4; Sylvester Jackson, Salem-Crescent A. C.; Ted Moses, Long Island K. of C.; Hugh McBride, Paulist A. C.; Joe LaSalle, Seward Gym; James Morris, Ascension Parish House; Eddie Herbst, St. Anselm's A. C.; Frank Erkman, Sol Rosen, Jimmy Burns, W. O'Morrissey, St. Bartholomew Club.

tridge's George Groom, which had worked well, although he had not started before at the meeting.

W. Daniel's English-bred colt Conde went into a big lead early in the race and held command until the turn for home. There Chick Lang brought Wild Aster up with a fine rush and he quickly took the measure of the outlander, galloping in to win by two lengths. H. Mart's filly Quin Chin beat George Groom by a length for the third money.

YALE JUNIOR TRIO LOSES POLO BATTLE

Is Beaten in Class B Match by 101st Cavalry Team by 6½ to 4½.

The 101st Cavalry polo trio defeated the Yale Junior Varsity team last night at the 101st Cavalry Armory in a Class B game by the score of 6½ to 4½. It was a closely played and hard fought engagement with both aggregations on practically even terms until the final chukker, when the cavalry trio drew away from the collegians.

In the first period Walloy and [illegible] tallied for Yale, while Wallace and Wilson scored for the 101st. [illegible] Wallace registered in the second session, but a foul by Walloy [illegible] the Blue from gaining a [illegible] Walloy's and Olds's goals [illegible] by a pair by Kornblum and [illegible] Kornblum fouled, tying the [illegible] the last period, however, [illegible] and Wilson tallied to bring the [illegible] in the lead.

In two preliminary games [illegible] in the Class D tourney the [illegible] Riding and Driving Club and the [illegible] divided two games. "White Christmas"—indoors!

(A timely tip for shopping wives)

At every draw of his Christmas gift cigar, a fresh flurry of ashes fell gently on the green boughs beneath. Snow flakes are all right on trees. But on rugs and vests—they are not so good! Keep your "white Christmas" to out o'doors by giving him a box of Blackstones this year.

You see, Blackstone ash holds firm because it's the ash of exceptionally fine tobaccos. The filler is 100% Havana—Cuba grows no more costly tobacco. The wrapper is silky Sumatra—the most expensive wrapper tobacco grown. And every Blackstone is made with the same cleanliness that characterizes the making of the finest food specialties.

Blackstone is a safe cigar to give. It has been an extremely popular brand for 53 years. And in all these 53 years it has never been so fine, so mild and so even burning as it is today.

You'll find boxes of Blackstones at all good cigar counters. Ask to see the special Christmas wrappings.

Robins Sell Sammy Bohne, An Infielder, to Minneapolis

Another infielder was pared off the salary list of the Brooklyn club yesterday when Wilbert Robinson announced that Sammy Bohne had been sold to the Minneapolis club of the American Association. Bohne came to the Dodgers from Cincinnati, where at one time he was regular shortstop of the Reds and was hailed as a promising comer. On the Pacific Coast Bohne was a sensation and cost the Reds a fancy price.

TWO GOLF BODIES MEET THIS WEEK

M. G. A. SESSION TUESDAY

G. A. Nicol Jr. Will Then Succeed H. T. Barrow as President of the Organization—Other Golf News.

By WILLIAM D. RICHARDSON.

Two more golf meetings are on the schedule for this week, that of the Women's Westchester and Fairfield County Golf Association being scheduled for tomorrow and the annual session of the Metropolitan Golf Association for Tuesday evening. With those two out of the way only two more remain, the annual meeting of the New Jersey Golf Association and the major meeting of all, which is that of the United States Golf Association, to be held at Pittsburgh in January.

So far as the meetings scheduled for this week are concerned there is nothing of unusual importance, the main items for consideration being the election of officers for the coming year and discussion as to the courses for the 1927 championships and other tournaments that fall under the jurisdiction of the two organizations.

The meeting of the Metropolitan Association will mark the passing out of office of Harry T. Barrow, who has twice served as its President and who, previous to that, was head of the New Jersey State Golf Association. Few men in the district have given as freely of their time to golf work as has Mr. Barrow and he will leave his office in the knowledge of having done a great deal for golf in the two districts. His successor as President of the M. G. A., George A. Nicol Jr., has had a great deal of experience, having headed the Westchester County Golf Association for one or two terms and followed that up by serving as M. G. A. Secretary.

U. S. G. A. Explains June Date.

An interesting item appeared in The London Times a short while ago. It stated that the Royal and Ancient Club had received a telegram from the United States Golf Association saying, "Statements appearing in the press that the selection of a June date for the American open championship should be construed as a challenge to the Royal and Ancient are totally unwarranted, and are deplored by this association. Climatic conditions in this country make it undesirable to hold major championships during July. This was the sole reason for the selection of a June date."

It is a rather queer thing that the U. S. G. A. did not issue an official statement as to why it fixed the date for the American open in the same week that the British had picked for the British open at the time such action was taken. Most of the officials appeared loath to give any explanation of the decision. H. H. Ramsay, the Secretary, did say that the members of the Executive Committee had considered holding the event on July 8, 9 and 10, but that the proximity of those dates to July 4, when the majority of courses are heavily used and when the professionals reap a harvest, made it appear unwise to hold the championship then and so the June date was chosen, although it came into conflict with the British open championship dates.

Furthermore, it took the association a long time to discover that July was not a good month in which to hold the open championship. For years the P. G. A. complained about holding the championship during July, yet year after year there was no change, the reason that was assigned then being that the holding of the British championship in early June made it impossible to do otherwise.

Perhaps the action taken this year was not a challenge to the R. and A. But at least it was a notification to that body that if there is to be any international golf in the future there will have to be more cooperation in the matter of schedule-making.

Winter Golf at Atlantic City.

The recent Christmas Seal Tournament held at Seaview demonstrated the possibilities of golf at Atlantic City when courses near by are entirely covered with snow. None of those who left New York last Tuesday dreamed that at a spot a little more than a hundred miles south they would find a golf course entirely free from snow and greens in almost perfect condition. But that's what they found at Seaview, The tournament itself was a tremendous success and great credit redounds to Jess Sweetser, who endorsed the plan, A. W. Tillinghast, who was chiefly instrumental in making the arrangements, and C. W. Geist who acted as host on the occasion.

The presence of J. Wood Platt, Fred Knight, Tom Wooton, Findlay Douglas and others in the field made the event one that bristled with good matches, and the final between Platt and Knight was as good as any one would ever wish to see. That Platt would turn out to be the winner was almost assured from the very start, and after watching him one wonders why it is that he hasn't done more in the national amateur championship. He certainly deserves a place in the first ten American amateurs.

Diegel Engagement a Surprise.

The signing of Leo Diegel as playing professional by the Fenimore Club, as announced recently, came as quite a surprise to golfers in the Metropolitan district, who thought that the brilliant golfer had decided to make California his home for some years at least. Diegel is unquestionably one of the outstanding golfers of the present time, and his new berth, which will provide him with plenty of competition from the numerous stars that have gathered in Westchester, ought to aid in stabilizing his game and bringing him the rewards that his skill deserves.

The hiring of Diegel does not mean that he will supplant "Genial" Jimmy Donaldson, who has served as the club's professional for several years. Jimmy will be retained at his old position and be in charge of the shop and teaching end. Diegel will be a playing professional who, members no doubt hope, will bring Fenimore to a place where it will share the reputation now enjoyed by Quaker Ridge, Oak Ridge, Fairview and other clubs whose professionals have won national honors in tournaments.

The announcement of Diegel's acquisition was made at the club's annual meeting, which was held at the Hotel Astor a short time ago and at which Samuel S. Koenig, who has been President of the club since its inception, was made an honorary member. The reports of officers showed that the club was in a sound condition, financially and in all other ways.

Charles H. Banks, associate of the late Seth J. Raynor, has been awarded the contract for designing and building a new twenty-seven hole golf course for the Hackensack Golf Club of Hackensack, N. J. Owing to the high valuation placed on the present course the club recently sold this property for about $650,000. The new course is to be built on the Kinderkamack and adjoining property which the club has purchased in Oradell, and the new club will be called the Kinderkamack Golf Club.

A topographical survey of this new property is nearing completion, and the construction of the course will start early in the Spring with a view to completing at least eighteen holes and opening the course for play in the Summer of 1928. The new property commands a beautiful view, and part of it is heavily wooded, and when completed the course will be one of the finest in the metropolitan district.

Lafayette Awards Letters To 21 of Unbeaten Eleven

Special to The New York Times.

EASTON, Pa., Dec. 11.—Twenty-one letters were awarded to members of the undefeated Lafayette football team of Coach G. Herbert McCracken at the annual dinner held here tonight. Because four of the varsity men were at Annapolis, participating in the Navy-Lafayette basketball game, the election of a football captain for 1927 was postponed. Hugo Bezdek, coach of the Penn State eleven, was the principal speaker. The "L" was awarded to Captain Kirkleski, Atkinson, Highberger, March, Guest, Wilson, Kressler, Rhinehart, Warren, Thompson, Behrens, Grube, Miller, Borger, Houser, Potts, Chimenti, McGarvey, Pursell, Shellenberger, Petrecca and Harold Smith, student manager.

WESTERN GOLF PLAY TO GO TO SEATTLE

OPEN TITLE TOURNEY SET

Date Not Arranged, but Olympia Fields Is Site—Young Is Re-elected President.

CHICAGO, Dec. 11 (AP).—The Western amateur golf championship tonight was awarded to the Seattle (Wash.) Country Club by a vote of the delegates of the Western Golf Association and the date fixed was July 18. The Western open was awarded to the Olympia Fields Country Club, Chicago, with the date of this event to be determined later.

The association re-elected most of its officers without opposition. The administration was again headed by Hobart P. Young, Chicago, as President. The main withdrawals were A. C. Allen, Chicago, and James D. Standish, Detroit, Vice Presidents, whose places were filled by Robert M. Cutting, Chicago, last year's Secretary, and Jack Hughes, Omaha, for many years a director.

R. A. Woods, Chicago, replaced Cutting as Secretary, but Joseph C. Le Duc and Henry A. Gardner, both of Chicago, remained as Treasurer and General Counsel.

The directors are A. S. Kerry, Seattle; H. C. McCall, Minneapolis; Ed B. Tufts, Los Angeles; S. L. Yerkes, Birmingham, and Harry T. Gilbert, Youngstown.

At the head of the Nominating Committee for 1927 is Melvin A. Traylor of Chicago, President of the First National Bank. He also is a Vice President of the United States Golf Association. The other members are Harlan Peyton of Spokane, C. H. Harman of Pasadena, I. J. Osoun of Birmingham and W. G. Graves of St. Paul.

UNION RALLIES TO WIN.

Trails St. Stephen's Five, 13-11, at Half-Time, but Triumphs, 27 to 17.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Union College opened its basketball season tonight by defeating the St. Stephens quintet, 27 to 17. The visitors put up a fast game during the first period and at half-time led, 13 to 11. The Garnet, however, started the second half with a rush and soon gained the lead.

BOSTON SOCCER VICTOR.

Defeats Providence, 2 to 1, in an American League Game.

BOSTON, Dec. 11.—Boston defeated Providence, 2 to 1, in an American Soccer League game here today, in which Boston enjoyed 75 per cent. of the play, only to win in the last half minutes of play.

The home team forced eleven corners in the first thirty minutes. The Providence defenders performed brilliantly with McAuley and Nicol especially prominent in a stubborn defense.

With only 30 seconds left to play and the score tied, Blair passed to J. Ballantyne on the 18-yard mark, and the inside left, taking a quick shot for goal, saw his grounder pass between the legs of Nicol for what proved to be the winning tally.

The line-up:

WANDERERS TO PLAY NEWARK HERE TODAY

League Soccer Battle at Hawthorne Field Is Expected to Be Close.

At Hawthorne Field in Brooklyn this afternoon at 2:30 the Wanderers will play the Newark Club of the American Soccer League in a match that promises to find the Brooklyn forces once more winging toward the top of the circuit standing. The game scheduled for New York Oval with the Giants acting as host to the Providence eleven is not certain to be played, as the Oval pitch suffered heavily from the recent snowstorm. The Wanderers' game was to have been played in Newark, but the latter team's field was not in condition.

In the only other league contest this afternoon, Indiana Flooring of New York will compete against Fall River on the latter's pitch at Tiverton. The Fall River field has been in good condition for the last three days, so there should be no trouble in staging a fast game there.

Newark is expected to give the Wanderers a close battle. All season the Jersey forces have had flights of great brilliance, but until recently they have been unable to settle down to a steady brand of soccer. Recently, however, they added Tommy Duggan and Cecil Bremner, both former Giant stars, to their forward line, and these men seem to have supplied the steadying influence that was so badly needed.

In addition, McGowan, another newcomer, will make his début against Brooklyn, at left outside. He is a consistent performer, and with a new forward line in action there is every reason to believe that Newark will put up a hard battle. This club's defense always has been good, as the low point total against it testifies, and with an attacking line that has the scoring punch, it ought to begin to get somewhere in the league.

Just how far it can advance in this afternoon's battle is something that cannot be hazarded without at least a glance at the Wanderers' line-up. With the exception of Neufeld, all the injured stars are back in uniform, and Brooklyn will present pretty close to its strongest line up this afternoon.

Eisenhoffer is to be back at his old post at inside left, with Konrad on the other wing. This combination gives Brooklyn its best attacking section, and, with Drucker and Morris to start the fast passing, the attack ought to function with more accuracy and smoothness than when the stars were on the injured list.

The probable line-up:

WANDERERS.		NEWARK.
Smith	G.	Murdock
Gross	R.F.	Marshall
Wilson	L.F.	Herd
Mahrer	R.H.	Stevenson
Drucker	C.H.	Thompson
Morris	L.H.	Nicols

Rutgers Team to Elect.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 11.—The annual dinner to the Rutgers football team will be held next week, probably on Thursday, according to plans arranged by Graduate Manager Harry J. Rockafeller. The dinner this year will be attended only by the members of the squad and by a few men having official connection with the team and will be featured by the election of the captain for next season.

four and ties to continue play today. It took a total of 158 or better to remain in the running.

Among those who failed to qualify were H. B. (Dutch) Leonard, former Boston Red Sox pitcher. Leonard, who has a ranch near Fresno, is a left-handed golfer. He went out in 37 today, but his total of 79 was not good enough to make up for his 85 of yesterday. Other non-qualifiers were John Black Jr., 19-year-old son of the Wichita professional, and Dink Templeton, former Olympic team high jumper.

Joe Novak, San Francisco professional, qualified with only one iron club, which has an adjustable head which can be set to any angle desired. The club was invented by a Catholic priest in Nevada.

SILKWORTH WINNER AT N. Y. A. C. TRAPS

Takes High Scratch Trophy at Travers Island, Breaking 99 of 100 Targets.

MACNICHOL ALSO IS VICTOR

Captures High Handicap Cup After Shoot-Off—Allers Wins Bergen Beach Prize.

W. S. Silkworth did some excellent shooting at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. He took the high scratch trophy from a field of twenty-three gunners with the excellent card of 99 out of a possible 100 targets. Silkworth missed his only "bird" in the third time at the traps.

Six gunners tied for the high handicap cup. They were W. E. Beers, J. Nida, A. F. MacNichol, M. L. Tirrell, O. D. Tuthill and W. G. Allen. On the shootoff, MacNichol was the winner. The Travers Island trophy went to J. Nida. In the doubles scratch cup shoot legs were scored by F. A. Siebert and B. J. Field.

In the handicap shoot for the same cup a leg went to E. Milliken. The distance cup was won by A. F. MacNichol.

The scores:

Name	Targ. Bd. Cup	Sec. & H'cap
W. E. Beers	125	24-100
W. S. Silkworth	125	24-0-24

Winners.

High Scratch Prize—W. S. Silkworth.
High Handicap Prize—A. F. MacNichol.
Travers Island—J. Nida.

Allers Jamaica Winner.

Poor weather was responsible for only six gunners reporting at the Jamaica Bay traps of the Bergen Beach Gun Club yesterday. The High Scratch Cup was won by C. G. Allers. He had a card of 92 out of a possible 100 targets. The High Handicap Cup went to G. M. Walling, who had a full card of 100 targets.

The scores:

Name.	Hit.	H'cap.	Total.
C. G. Allers	92	10	102
G. M. Walling	91	10	100

GREENLEAF RUNS 112; WINS MATCH, 900-535

Defeats Hueston, 125 to 40 and 113 to 21, in Closing Blocks of Special Cue Test.

Ralph Greenleaf defeated Thomas Hueston in the two concluding blocks of their 900-point pocket billiard match yesterday at the Dwyer's Broadway Academy and finished the match a winner by a 900 to 535 score. The world's champion won from the former world's champion, 125 to 40 in the afternoon, and 113 to 21 in the evening. He made high runs of 112 and 42, respectively. The high runs for Hueston were 26 and 11 respectively.

Greenleaf required four innings in the afternoon block and seven in the evening.

M'CALLISTER NAMED MANAGER OF INDIANS

Winter in Cleveland preparing for the Spring training season in Hot Springs.

Seven New Managers.

McCallister is the seventh new manager to be appointed in the big leagues since the close of the season. In the American League Bill Carrigan has been named for Lee Fohl at Boston, Ray Schalk for Eddie Collins at Chicago, George Moriarty for Ty Cobb at Detroit, Dan Howley for George Sisler at St. Louis and McCallister for Tris Speaker at Cleveland.

It is noteworthy that all four of the Western American League clubs have selected new managers.

HOPPE IS VICTOR OVER MATSUYAMA

Wins and Loses in Final Two Blocks of 18.2 Match to Triumph, 3,600 to 2,145.

HAS AVERAGE OF 57 29-63

Junior Champion Triumphs in Afternoon, 602 to 300, but Trails in Nightcap, 300 to 61.

Willie Hoppe yesterday broke even in block victories with Kinrey Matsuyama in their 18.2 balkline billiard match, which came to an end at the Strand Academy last night, but emerged with the point victory by more than a thousand points. The final score was 3,600 for Hoppe to 2,145 for the national junior champion.

Hoppe went out in sixty-three innings for a grand average of 57 29-63. Those who looked upon the match as practice for the former balkline king in preparation for his match with Erich Hagenlacher for the world's 18.2 balkline championship expressed high praise for Hoppe. His showing was considered exceptional, as he has made a high run of more than 200 on every day of the match. His high run yesterday was 226, made in the night block.

Matsuyama finished the match with a grand average of 35 45-60 for a total of sixty innings. His playing was also considered very good for a junior and the marked difference in the scores was not considered a reflection on Matsuyama, particularly in view of Hoppe's great showing in the match.

In the afternoon block yesterday Matsuyama won, 602 to 300. He scored three runs of over one hundred in winning the block, his high run being 122. Hoppe's high run in this block was 102. Hoppe won the night block, 300 to 61, in four innings. He made runs of 8 and 9 and then reeled off 226. Matsuyama had meantime scored 8 and 18. Hoppe then went to the table and finished off the match with a run of 61, which gave him his total of 3,600.

The score by innings:

AFTERNOON.

Matsuyama—72 115 0 0 3 11 68 1 30 23 0 Last 5 Inn. Total, 300.

EVENING.

Hoppe—8 9 226 47. Total, 300.
Matsuyama—8 18 35 x. Total, 61.

By JAMES R. HARRISON.

ment to change some of the provisions of the agreement under which Landis rules—a movement to dilute some of Landis's iron-clad powers.

That the Judge will receive a boost in salary is highly problematical, for even the loyal National Leaguers are divided on that point.

The Williams faction, of course, would be delighted to have Landis declared null and void, but this faction is hopelessly in the minority and will have to be content with desultory sniping.

Both leagues will take up the schedules for next season, officially declare the Pirates and Cardinals pennant-winners, hear annual reports and, in the case of the American League, ratify a new constitution.

In the American League there is also great interest as to where Eddie Collins will go. Eddie says he has two offers from other American League clubs and will make a decision this week. He is said to be headed for the Athletics.

Renewal of negotiations between Rogers Hornsby and President Sam Breadon of the Cardinals may enliven the National League session here Tuesday. They are still far apart on the salary question, and the rumor persists that Hornsby will be traded.

Many National League personages are already in this city. Garry Herrmann of Cincinnati, Barney Dreyfus of Pittsburgh, William Veeck of Chicago, Emil Fuchs of Boston, Wilbert Robinson of Brooklyn, William F. Baker of Philadelphia and Sam Breadon of St. Louis, are the club presidents on the scene. This completes the list of presidents.

President Veeck of the Cubs expressed great satisfaction with his new manager, Joe McCarthy.

"I hired McCarthy more because of his success in developing young players in Louisville than because of his winning pennants for that club," said Veeck. "His help to us will show more next year than it did the past season. The time has come when every league magnate must have a manager who can develop rather than just lead players. Our club has the money and the disposition to buy stars, but one simply cannot buy them any more; they must be trained and brought forward to stardom by a man fitted by nature for that vital task."

President Heydler revealed yesterday that the Cubs led the league in home attendance, passing the 800,000 mark. The Cubs are double-decking their stand in anticipation of another prosperous season.

ROSENBLOOM FACES KAPLAN TOMORROW

BANTAMWEIGHTS BOX FRIDAY

Canzoneri Will Meet Substitute for Taylor in Main Event—Other News of the Ring.

Boxing will return to Madison Square Garden this week with a rush, with two important professional shows scheduled for the arena. Tomorrow night two leading middleweight contenders will feature the card and on Friday night a group of outstanding bantamweights will meet in an elimination tournament that is aimed to bring forth a challenger for title honors.

The middleweights who will top the program tomorrow are K. O. Phil Kaplan, hard-hitting Harlem battler, and Maxey Rosenbloom, his neighborhood rival. This bout will be the main event of a card of three ten-round matches and has aroused unusual interest. Rosenbloom is regarded by many as one of the foremost middleweights in the country. Two weeks before Tiger Flowers lost his title to Mickey Walker, Rosenbloom fought Flowers and received the decision in the ninth round on a foul. Only for the fact that both fighters entered the ring over the 160-pound limit Rosenbloom would today be champion.

Among Rosenbloom's other notable achievements of the year was to withstand ten furious rounds with Jack Delaney, the world's light-heavyweight champion, his two victories over Johnny Wilson, a former champion, and a torrid battle with the late Harry Greb, which the Pittsburgher won by a close margin.

Kaplan Also Coming Fast.

Kaplan, too, has been coming along at a great clip since graduating from the welterweight division. He is a terrific puncher, is naturally well inside the 160-pound limit and therefore is able to box at his full fighting strength without having impaired his condition by trying to make weight.

An attractive supporting card has been arranged to precede the feature with Eddie Anderson, crack Wyoming featherweight, meeting Babe Herman in the ten-round semi-final. In another ten, Alf Mancini, the Anglo-Italian welterweight, will oppose Farmer Joe Cooper. Mancini showed very impressively in his last start here and is regarded as a promising prospect in the 147-pound division. Cooper jumped into prominence in the Garden several weeks ago when he floored the veteran Lew Tendler twice for counts of nine, though Tendler's experience eventually enabled him to win the decision. Teddy Baldock, English bantamweight, will meet Joe Clifford, and Jack Phillips will oppose Sammy Morgan in the opening four-rounder.

Plenty of Action Friday.

Bushey Graham, Utica bantamweight and recognized by the State Athletic Commission as the foremost challenger for Charley (Phil) Rosenberg's title, will oppose Tony Canzoneri, Williamsburgh youngster, in the feature bout of four ten-rounders at the Garden on Friday night. Graham was signed by Matchmaker McMahon to take the place of Bud Taylor, Terre Haute bantam, who originally had been signed to meet Canzoneri. Taylor was forced to withdraw from the card on Thursday because of an eye affliction which will necessitate an operation.

In the semi-final ten, Johnny Green, Harlem bantam, will oppose Vic Burrone, rugged Greenwich Village boxer. Andy Martin of Boston will meet Carl Tremaine, Cleveland veteran, in another ten, while the opening ten will be between Dominick Petrone of Harlem and Pete Sarmiento, little Filipino boxer.

Mayor Frank Hague, who is assisting Promoter Humber Fugazy in staging the Christmas Fund Show at the Fourth Regiment Armory in Jersey City on Dec. 20, has made arrangements to make a tour of the training camps of all the boxers on the card with Fugazy. A smashing program of four ten-round bouts has been arranged for the show which is expected to draw a capacity crowd of more than 10,000. In the feature ten, Jack Delaney, world's light heavyweight champion, will oppose Bud Gorman, Wisconsin heavyweight. This bout is expected to provide a real line on how Delaney shapes up as a contender for heavyweight honors. In the semi-final, Charley (Phil) Rosenberg will face Petey Mack of Jersey City; Andy Di Vodi, Bay Ridge welterweight, will tackle Jack McFarland of Elizabeth while the fourth ten will be between Johnny Green of Harlem and Giovanni Salerno, Italian bantamweight.

A bout that is expected to have an important bearing on the junior lightweight championship situation will be fought at the New Broadway Arena in Brooklyn tomorrow night when Jack Bernstein of Yonkers, former holder of the class title, meets Ray Miller of Chicago in the feature bout of twelve rounds. Bernstein is making a determined bid to regain his former title, and intends to file a formal challenge for a championship fight if he succeeds in conquering the hard-hitting Chicago battler. The ten-round semi-final between Joe Silvers and Johnny Pilucci has stirred up almost as much interest. In a six-round bout Harry Ebbets, promising Freeport youngster, will meet Henry Shaw, Harlem negro.

A card of four six-round bouts and three fours, with Henry Goldberg, crack local welterweight, meeting Joe Marino of Staten Island in the feature event, has been arranged for the New Manhattan Sporting Club on Wednesday night. The principals in the other sixes will be Joe Ferrentino vs. Phil Tobias, Eddie Goldberg vs. Pete Nebo, Sammy Ferrenti vs. Charlie Caserta.

Four 8-Rounders at 22d Armory.

A card of four eight-round bouts will make up the program of soldier boxing at the Twenty-second Engineers Regiment Armory on Tuesday night. The pairings will be Billy Franklin vs. Oscar Pults, Mickey Whalen vs. Nick Esposito, Tommy Connelly vs. Billy Tosk and Sailor Billy Dearing vs. Leonard Neblett.

Al Toveriski of the home outfit and Rhoma Halsoll of the 369th Infantry will meet in the main event of six rounds at the 102d Medical Regiment Armory on Thursday night. In the other sixes the rivals will be Ward vs. Sailor Grande, Steve Jennings, Frank [illegible], Jack Tilyou, Kid Reyes vs. [illegible] and Willie Jackson vs. [illegible].

Four prominent welterweights are scheduled to appear in two six-round bouts in the First Regiment Armory in Newark on Wednesday night, the main event Jack Hood, English champion, is scheduled to [illegible] Young Jack Dempsey, while the other ten will bring together Willie [illegible], east side battler, and Abe [illegible]. The show is being held under the auspices of the National [illegible] Club.

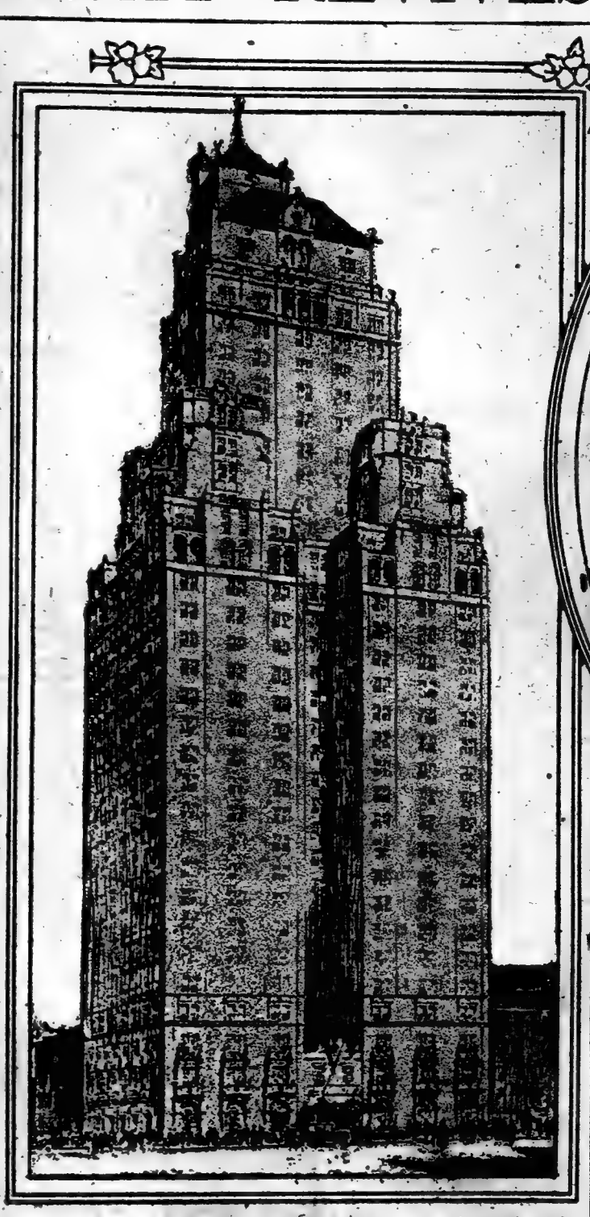
The result is that the buyer must pay dearly for it and the real danger lies in the fact that the city may change its plans and not take the property.

"This happens frequently and it is fresh in my mind, in the proceeding pending in the Supreme Court for the extension of Sixth Avenue. In this proceeding, the property on the north side of Watts Street east of Varick Street was to be acquired at the same time as the Sixth Avenue property but the plan was abandoned."



The Thirty-six Story Warwick Apartment Hotel at Fifty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue, Opened Last Week. Built by Dwight P. Robinson & Co. George P. Post & Sons, Architects.

TALL OFFICE BUILDING FOR FIFTH AV. CORNER

Twenty-four-Story Structure Built in Record Time by Harris and Samuel Sokolsky.

One of the most important improvements of the year in the lower Fifth Avenue section is the twenty-four-story office and showroom building on the southeast corner of Twenty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, which Harris and Samuel Sokolsky, operators and builders, have erected in record time.

The building, which has an area of 11,500 square feet, occupies the site of the old Knickerbocker apartments, which for years were a landmark on the avenue.

Ground was broken for the new structure about nineteen weeks ago, and although the construction has set a new record for rapidity nothing has been slighted and the structure will open its doors to tenants this month.

The Fifth Avenue entrance is in the form of a Gothic arch opening upon an imposing arcade which leads through to the Twenty-eighth Street side of the structure. The building is equipped with six high-speed passenger and three large freight elevators. A package chute from penthouse to street floor has been installed.

The building was designed by George F. Pelham, architect, and erected under the supervision of Messrs. Angus Ashe and Charles Mayer, engineers. The project involves about $3,500,000. Thoens & Flaunlacher, Inc., have been appointed agents of the building.

BUILDING FIGURES.

A 6 Per Cent. Decline Shown in U. S. During November.

The total volume of construction contracts awarded in the thirty-seven States east of the Rocky Mountains during November amounted to $487,012,500, according to Dodge reports.

The above figure represented a decline of 6 per cent. from October, 1926. However, there was an increase of 3 per cent. over November of last year.

Analysis of the November building and engineering record for these States showed the following items of importance: $229,820,900, or 47 per cent. of all construction, for residential buildings; $64,781,100, or 13 per cent. for industrial buildings; $59,657,100, or 12 per cent., for commercial buildings; $50,128,400, or 10 per cent., for public works and utilities; $34,571,900, or 7 per cent., for educational buildings; $24,861,100, or 5 per cent., for social and recreational projects; $9,603,900, or 2 per cent., for hospitals and institutions, and $9,329,800, or 2 per cent., for religious and memorial buildings.

NEW STATE RECORD IN REALTY SALES

Tax Receipts for Fiscal Year Show $5,500,000 in Real Estate Transactions.

A new high record in New York State realty transactions, exceeding a total of $5,500,000,000, was made for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, according to the report just issued by President M. F. Loughman of the State Tax Commission. The report deals with receipts paid into the Mortgage Tax Bureau and does not include cash transactions in real estate.

The estimate of $5,500,000,000 is made on the basis of the legal tax rate of 50 cents per $100 of the mortgage and on the assumption that the average mortgage amounts to 50 per cent. of the value of the property involved.

The total gross tax collected from July 1, 1925, to June 30, 1926, being the largest in the history of the State, amounted to $13,795,884, and compared with $10,872,139 in 1924-25 shows an increase of $2,923,745.

In the fiscal year 1925-26 there were recorded 322,633 mortgages, a gain of 43,361 over the previous year.

The increase in real estate transactions is distributed generally over most of the counties of the State. Decreases are noticed principally in those counties which are largely rural. In the five counties comprising Greater New York, the increase in mortgage tax collected amounted to $1,972,781, which would indicate that the increase in real estate transactions in which mortgages were involved in the greater city was at least $80,000,000 more than it was in the 1925 fiscal year.

The largest proportionate increase occurred in Suffolk County, where there were recorded mortgages totaling two and one-half times the amount of the mortgages recorded in the previous year. The gross mortgage tax collected in Suffolk County in 1925-26 was $228,060, as compared to $90,605 the year before.

In Westchester the gross tax collected in the last fiscal year was $752,568, being $181,292.96 in excess of the former year. In Nassau County the tax collected totaled $723,338, which was slightly over 100 per cent. more than the previous year. Erie, Monroe, Onondaga, Albany, Niagara and Broome also show substantial gains.

The total cost of the collection of the mortgage tax this year is $97,009, or $251 less than in the previous year. After refunds and the cost of collection had been deducted a net collection of $13,696,037 remained. The State Treasury received half this amount and the other half was retained by the County Treasurers for distribution to the cities and towns from which it was collected.

New Construction Record.

For the first time in the history of the construction industry the advent of Winter is seeing an increase in the volume of construction operation. So great was the activity last month that a new record for November was set, according to statistics compiled by the Associated General Contractors of America.

Eighth Avenue Being Rebuilt In the Midtown Trade Section

Forty-second Street Junction Fast Becoming One of the City's Busiest Traffic Centres—Old Landmarks Giving Way to Commercial Buildings.

To the number of exceptionally busy traffic junctions in New York City which have, during recent years, attracted the interest of enthusiastic observers and traffic statisticians has recently been added the Eighth Avenue and Forty-second Street centre. It has been quietly growing in activity during the last three or four years, but only perhaps in the last few months have its possibilities as one of the great transit sections of the city been clearly visualised.

The digging of the subway along that thoroughfare, which is destined to open a new era of commercial prosperity for the avenue, and the rapidity of the garment industry expansion on and west of the avenue in the blocks between Fortieth and Thirty-fourth Streets present striking object lessons of the great volume of transportation which will congregate in and around Eighth Avenue and Forty-second Street.

What appears to be the peak of traffic congestion is the present situation at the Eighth Avenue and Forty-second Street junction in view of the necessity of curtailing both pedestrian and vehicular space until the great excavation for the new subway is finished. An enormous amount of rock has had to be blasted and cut out directly in front of the Franklin Savings Bank building, at the southeast corner, and the movement of traffic there is one that requires unceasing patience on the part of the traffic officers as well as the drivers of motor and other vehicles.

Restricted Sidewalk Area.

With the numerous cellar extensions in front of many of the small store buildings, the sidewalk area, especially in the two or three blocks on the east side south of Forty-second Street, is exceedingly restricted. Instead of looking in the store windows, the majority of pedestrians prefer to line the wooden rail overlooking the cavernous subway depths and peer with more or less absorbing interest into the yawning abyss, which, despite all the difficulty, has been hollowed out in a surprisingly short time.

Within a few months, when the upset and more or less chaotic conditions now prevailing on the greater part of Eighth Avenue for more than a mile south of Fifty-ninth Street pass away with the covering over of the subway ditch, New Yorkers will be able to appreciate the avenue in its modern appearance. The upbuilding of the avenue this season in the blocks immediately north of Thirty-fourth Street has been fully as active and even more clearly apprehended than the vast digging underground.

One of the many towering structures which have completely changed the old-time skyline is the twenty-three-story Shampan Eighth Avenue Building, nearing completion on a large plot surrounding the southwest corner of Thirty-eighth Street. That has been a great centre of new structural development for the garment and textile trades. On the northwest corner is the recently completed twenty-one-story Baer Building.

A tall structure on a somewhat narrow plot was completed last Spring on the southeast corner of Thirty-ninth Street. The block front on the east side between Thirty-seventh and Thirty-eighth Street contains two huge structures, the ground floors of which are occupied by two banks, the Bank of Yorktown being on the Thirty-eighth Street corner and the American Union Bank on the Thirty-seventh Street corner and which gave that name to the building.

New Banking Centre.

Evidences of the new business growth in that locality is well attested by the number of financial institutions having their offices there. In addition to the two formerly mentioned, the Chelsea Exchange Bank is preparing to move into large offices on the ground floor of the big Arcade Building, just completed, on the easterly block between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Streets. The Chelsea Bank will move from its old home in Thirty-fourth Street and will occupy space on the Thirty-sixth Street corner. That structure occupies all of the block front except the immediate Thirty-seventh Street corner and has a large frontage on Thirty-seventh Street. The two old tenements recently remaining on the Thirty-seventh Street corner are now being torn down for another loft structure.

On the west side of the block, between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Streets, there is a twenty-one-story building on the half block front surrounding the immediate Thirty-seventh Street corner. Abutting it is another arcade building, eighteen stories, at 306-310 West Thirty-seventh Street running through to Thirty-sixth Street. On the southwest corner of Thirty-sixth Street a towering twenty-five-story structure is nearing completion which, with the liberal gilded ornamentation on the lower portion of the façade, will add to the resplendence of the avenue in that locality.

On the east side, occupying all of the block front except the Thirty-sixth Street corner, is the twelve-story Baumann Building, erected several years ago, the pioneer structure of its type on that part of the avenue and which aroused more than passing notice in realty circles during the time of its construction. In addition to these edifices there has been considerable new construction of tall lofts on the blocks in the Thirties, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues.

In the Thirty-fourth Street block, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, the outstanding improvement is the big Pennsylvania Building, having a large frontage on the north side, and a large portion of the ground floor has just been leased for its new home by the Trade Bank of New York, which will move from its smaller building a few doors to the west.

Old Shacks Passing Away.

The old tenements and shacks on Eighth Avenue, from Thirty-fourth to Forty-second Street, are rapidly passing away. They are now becoming scarce and therefore more noticeable than was the case three or four years ago, before the modern type of improvements offered no sharp comparisons. While many were practically hoary with age, they were, in the main, of a higher quality than the general run of buildings which lined the corresponding blocks of Seventh Avenue before the garment industry discovered the advantages of that thoroughfare for its activities.

Practically the only block on that avenue which still retains evidences of those almost forgotten days is the westerly side, between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Streets. That block front is still intact in its old style, and three or four old clothes and old shoe emporiums recall the familiar appearance of the avenue all the way south of Forty-first Street less than six years ago. A hat store in the block, bearing a well-known name, presents a picturesque contrast to its business neighbors. Two old tenements remain on the northeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, but the immediate corner one is practically obscured by a large advertising sign.

Protect Your Sprinklers.

The New York Fire Insurance Exchange, through its manager, Willis O. Robb, warns occupants of sprinklered premises of the necessity for extra care of automatic sprinkler equipment during cold weather.

In previous Winters, in times of intense cold and partly owing to the scarcity of coal, much trouble has been experienced with sprinkler systems. An inspection should be made to see that broken windows and ventilators which let in the cold are repaired and kept closed, and heating systems should have a capacity of a minimum of 40 degrees temperature at all times, including Sundays and holidays.

The sprinkler equipment should be examined and wrapped wherever wrappings are necessary to prevent freezing.

MORE HOME OWNERS WITH FIVE-DAY WEEK

Realtor Claims That Schedule Creates Greater Interest in Ownership.

General adoption of a shorter working week, with the five-day week already an actuality in some businesses, is having an important effect on home ownership, according to W. Burke Harmon, President of the Harmon National Real Estate Corporation. During the last few years curtailment of the working week to five days has been especially pronounced among executives and some of the higher paid and more closely organized skilled workmen, notably in the building trades.

"This increasing leisure among all classes of workers has become a remarkable incentive to the own-your-home movement in the United States," said Mr. Harmon yesterday. "Establishment of small country homes with congenial surroundings and recreational facilities, such as golf courses, has been especially marked during the last few years. In almost all office work the six-day week was long ago abolished, and five-and-one-half-day schedules are now general.

"During the Summer months most of the larger department stores in our cities are open only five days a week, while some of the largest chain stores have curtailed their working week by half a day.

"Of course, it has been impossible to establish the five-day week in industry as rapidly as in executive offices and retail stores. But some industries, such as the automobile industry, are being advantageously reduced to the five-day basis now.

"Naturally, the five-day week must presuppose production at least equaling that of the five-and-one-half-day week. It must also presuppose wages equal to present wages. A drop in production and wages would destroy all the advantages of the schedule.

"So far as quantitative production is concerned, the American worker has shown his ability. In the last five years the output of twenty-two leading American industries increased 34 per cent. per man employed—not in value, but in actual volume. The quantitative value of all manufactured products in the United States, eliminating the effect of price changes, increased 60 per cent. between 1914 and 1923. During these same years labor employment increased only 27 per cent. Consequently, during these nine years there was more than 25 per cent. in the output per worker. All of this has resulted in higher wages and greater wealth available for home investment.

"Establishment of the five-day week in American industry means that the worker has another day in which to enjoy his home and all the pleasures of home ownership in the country and suburbs. Few are the workers who would be willing to spend this extra holiday in the confines of a small city apartment.

"In consequence, home building is now comprising the largest portion of construction in the United States. In 1919 residence construction represented 32.9 per cent. of the total. In 1923 it comprised 46.8 per cent. Not only do such facts explain the long life of the American building boom, which has become so persistent that it can no longer be considered abnormal; they explain, in addition, the persistent and even widening demand for suburban properties. Already our cities are overspreading their boundaries far out into the countryside."

ECONOMIC FACTORS IN HECKSCHER PLAN

FAVORS SUBURBAN HOMES

At Almost the Same Monthly Cost Tenant Could Own His Residence Within a Few Years.

A sufficient length of time has elapsed since the announcement of the Heckscher plan for the building of model low-priced tenements to determine its possibilities and study many of the practical features connected with it, states Edwin F. Howell of the Monthly Payment Home Corporation, who also recognizes that it presents many difficulties.

"Essentially the program calls," he says, "for keeping the tenement house dweller in the congested districts of the city. If the apartment dweller is not provided with more room, then there is no relief from congestion, and providing more room simply means spreading the population more thinly over a given area. This does not seem practical because Manhattan Island at present is densely populated and there is no more space to be had for the erection of apartments or tenements which can be rented at a moderate price. The plan itself, therefore, would seem to provide for removing a substantial portion of the population to make room for more commodious quarters for those fortunate enough to secure quarters in the model tenements.

"At the present time the demand is for more playgrounds and wide streets to relieve the traffic, and this demand is one reason for the noticeable trend of population toward the suburbs, where more commodious quarters and a plot of land on which flowers, fruits and small plants may be cultivated.

"Let us analyze the economic aspects of the proposal. To begin with, a plot of ground 20 by 100 feet in the congested districts has a value of $30,000 to $70,000. Let us take an average value of $50,000 per lot, which may be considered on a low valuation, whether this lot is acquired by purchase or condemnation. On this lot, after the demolition of the existing structure, a building will be erected to house, let us say, six families and provide each family with adequate light, heat and sanitary conveniences.

"Providing light to these families means the utilization of more land. The cost of the building will be not less than $30,000, making a total investment of $80,000 to house six families. The rental will be $1,800 per year. It may be suggested that this property be not subject to taxation, but with hundreds of millions of tax exempt property in the city now it would be unfair to increase the burden of taxation of other property owners by granting further tax exemption privileges.

"The up-keep of the property at 2 per cent. will be $600 per year, which is a minimum figure. The dividends on return to the investor at 5 per cent. on the total investment will be $4,000, making a total for the three items of $6,400 per year, or $533 per month for each family. The reader does not need to be advised that there are additions to these expenses which must be reckoned with, such items as depreciation and insurance.

"For $75 per month the renter receives a comfortable apartment, still in the congested district, and no part of his monthly payment adds to his capital. At the end of a period of ten years he has nothing to show for his housing cost. It has been difficult to raise his children in comfort, safety and cleanliness, and in the meantime should the bread winner be stricken with misfortune or die, there is no accumulation or surplus to see the family through the period of stress.

"As against this picture, let us visualize what the renter can do in the suburbs. He can obtain a lot 20 feet to 40 feet by 100 feet with a well-constructed house for a cost of $6,000, and on which his total monthly charges, including heat, taxes, insurance, upkeep principal and interest on his mortgages, will be $51 per month. Of this amount $20 will represent a reduction in the principal which in 120 months will wipe out the mortgages and leave the purchaser in possession of a free and clear property.

"He will have then no further rent to pay and his maintenance charges will include only taxes, up-keep and insurance. Of far more value than this will be the fact that he has been able to raise his children in the open air with plenty of room to play and obtain healthful exercise.

"Before further time and money is invested in the development of what appears to be an impractical proposition, the matter should receive free and healthy discussion."

NEW SYNAGOGUE STARTED.

Ground Broken for Temple Anshe Chesed on West End Avenue.

Ground was broken last week at the northwest corner of West End Avenue and 100th Street for the erection of a new synagogue and community house for Temple Anshe Chesed, which has been housed for the past fifteen years at Seventh Avenue and 114th Street. The new building, which is expected to be completed next Fall, is described as a modern adaptation of the Romanesque and Byzantine styles of architecture, to be executed in deep buff-colored brick and stone.

The temple, which is expected to be one of the most beautiful in the city, will have a frontage of 85 feet on the avenue and 125 feet on 100th Street. With the ground it will cost considerably over $1,000,000 and will have a seating capacity of nearly 1,000. Besides the synagogue itself there will be the community house with a chapel accommodating about 150, a large social hall with accommodations for approximately 500 persons, a gymnasium, kitchens, dressing rooms, library, offices, &c. The community house will have six stories. Dr. Jacob Kohn is rabbi of the temple, Meyer Goodfriend is President and Edward I. Shire is the architect. Elias A. Cohen took charge of assembling the property.

FLUSHING CALLED THE FIRST SUBURB

SETTLED BY THE ENGLISH

Dutch Grant First Suburban Homesteaders Right to Occupy the Land in 1645.

Three centuries ago Adrian Block completed his humble little home at what is now known as 41 Broadway. The fast avenued little continent, as New York consisted of a few hardy and phlegmatic Dutch settlers whose sole purpose in founding the colony was to earn a peaceful and profitable living trading with the Indians. Their Dutch stubbornness would not permit them to dream of the Manhattan that was to be. Today few out of New York's population of millions know that such a man as Adrian Block ever lived and that his house was the first structure built by the hands of a white man in what is now New York City.

While Adrian was puffing at his pipe and agitating over the problems of home building the Matinnecock Indians were squatting about their teepees in what was to be Flushing. Adrian is forgotten and the last wigwam of the Indians has long since been folded as the great trek toward oblivion was started westward before the progress and the civilization of the white man.

Flushing, it is said, was Manhattan's first suburb.

In 1645 the Dutch who claimed Long Island as a part of Nieuw Amsterdam granted letters patent to a group of Englishmen from New England to settle in Vlissingen, as the Hollanders called it. The English soon made Vlissingen Flushing and the first house in the new village, by a queer coincidence, was built at 41 Broadway.

Robert W. Dacey of the Robert Dacey Associates, in commenting on this fact, says: "It is interesting to note the similarity in the street arrangement and general developments between Flushing and Manhattan. The streets, their general character and values, allow open the realty novice to anticipate the future sections. Main Street is to Flushing what Forty-second Street is to New York City. Likewise, Broadway (or Northern Boulevard), Flushing, is similar to Broadway, New York. Amity Street is the Fifth Avenue of Flushing. Madison Avenue, Flushing, running parallel to Amity Street, is the same type street in both places. Samford Avenue, with its many new high-class apartment houses, is the Park Avenue of Flushing. Bowne Avenue is the Fifty-seventh Street of Flushing, and Twenty-second Street (or 163d Street) is to Flushing, what 125th Street is to New York City.

"Flushing's long awaited subway is now almost complete. Subway trains are now running to Willets Point Station, just beyond the Flushing Bridge. The Flushing Main Street subway station is practically completed, except the laying of the rails to the Flushing side of the dual subway and traffic bridge, which opens up a new traffic artery from New York City, along Roosevelt Avenue, Flushing, where Amity Street is the continuation of Roosevelt Avenue, up to Broadway-Flushing, where Amity Street has been cut through and connected with Northern Boulevard. The paving of Roosevelt Avenue is now complete almost to the Flushing Bridge. The bridge is all in place and in the last stages of completion. Bus line service from the terminus of the subway at Main and Amity Streets will serve the surrounding communities of College Point, Malba, Beechhurst, Auburndale and Bayside. As the dual subway of Flushing will help all of that section of Flushing, so will the taking over of the Whitestone branch, and operating as a subway, affect the northern parts of Flushing, including College Point, Malba and Whitestone.

"Real property value is based on location, transportation, accessibility of rail, motor and water transportation, and above all, that atmosphere of home environment that gives one locality prestige over another. Flushing is everything that goes to represent real property values. The result of Flushing's improved transit facilities is inevitable. Population follows transportation, and naturally business must follow population. The terminus of a railroad or subway has always been the site of great activity. The fact that the population of Flushing has almost doubled during the last five years without rapid transit indicates that with the improved transit facilities the next five years will see the several communities of which Flushing is now the shopping centre combined in what may be termed 'The Metropolis of the North Shore.'

"Flushing is geographically the neck of the bottle comprising the entire north shore of Long Island. All motor and rail transportation must pass through Flushing."

Remove Old Bridge.

The Board of Estimate has adopted a resolution authorizing an appropriation of tax notes in the amount of $45,000 for the purpose of removing the old timber bridge which spans Coney Island Creek at Ocean Parkway and to construct a new culvert over which will be the road and sidewalks.

ESTATE HOLDING AT SPECIAL AUCTION SALE

Joseph Day to Offer Manhattan and Suburban Parcels in Vesey Street Exchange.

Joseph P. Day, auctioneer, will dispose of a number of city and suburban holdings at a special auction sale to be held in the Vesey Street Exchange salesrooms on Tuesday, Dec. 21, at 12 o'clock, noon.

One of the principal offerings is that of a property which is to be disposed of at executor's sale by order of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, executor of estate of the late Moses G. Byers. The property comprises a two-story brick building and a four-story stable on a plot 61 by 75 feet, at the southeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Eighteenth Street.

Other Manhattan offerings include the tenements and apartments, with and without stores, at the northwest corner of Central Park West and 104th Street, the northeast corner of Delancey and Lewis Streets, 94 East Broadway, 108 Monroe Street, 197 East Houston Street, and 246-252 West Thirty-seventh Street.

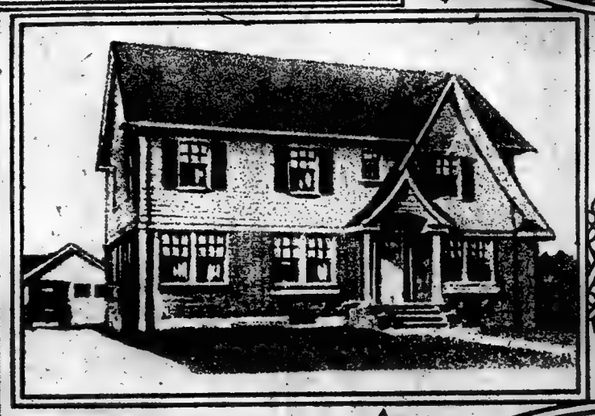
Offerings in Nassau County, L. I., and Yonkers, Westchester County, New York, include the dwelling with garage at 28 Centre Street, East Rockaway, and two lots at Lynbrook; also the business and apartment building site on Yonkers Avenue, adjoining the corner of Pudge Avenue, Yonkers.

DEVELOPERS IN MERGER.

Combined Organizations to Sell Biltmore Shores.

According to an announcement made recently, a merger has been effected between the Frankel Sales and Development Corporation and Tracy, Pearl & Co., developers of Amityville, L. I., whereby the combined organizations become the exclusive selling agents of Biltmore Shores, the $15,000,000 Fox-Frankel development at Massapequa, L. I. The name of Tracy, Pearl & Co. will be retained for the amalgamated companies, and for the time being the executive offices at both 370 Seventh Avenue and 123 West Forty-second Street will be maintained. Harry Frankel, President of the Frankel Sales and Development Corporation, it was stated, would henceforth devote himself to the development end of the business. Martin Nibur was the broker in the transaction.

This expansion in the marketing forces of Biltmore Shores is in keeping with the policy of the owner-developers, William Fox, the moving picture magnate, and Joseph Frankel, who had forecast intensive selling on the property as soon as the improvements reached the final stage of completion. Biltmore Shores has five miles of waterfront, the entire ocean-going canal waterway system extending over two miles having been completely bulwarked. Five miles of sidewalks and curbs and almost three miles of macadam roads have been constructed. Water and electricity have been installed and the first section of homes is now ready for occupancy. The amalgamation which brings Tracy, Pearl & Co. into the selling end of the business involves no change in the ownership of the property or the development company controlled by the Fox-Frankel interests.



Dwelling on Forest Avenue, Glen Ridge, N. J., Purchased by H. J. Ahlheim of Manhattan.

FIFTH AV. BUILDING IN KENNELLY SALE

Twelve-Story Holding of the Jackson Estate to Be Sold at Auction.

Prominent among the offerings of William Kennelly, Inc., auctioneers, at their special salesday auction of Monday, Dec. 20, at noon, in the new Real Estate Exchange, 86 Vesey Street, is the eleven-story fireproof mercantile building at 246 Fifth Avenue, which will be sold for the estate of Daniel H. Jackson, and a dissolution sale of the five and one-half-story tenement at 99 Forsythe Street and the six-story building at 110 Ludlow Street.

Among the other Manhattan parcels in this auction are apartment houses of Fifth Avenue, Seventh Avenue, Madison Avenue, West Twentieth Street, East Ninety-ninth Street, 104th Street, tenements on Grand Street, Henry Street, East Third Street, First Avenue and Third Avenue; also a four-story private dwelling on West End Avenue.

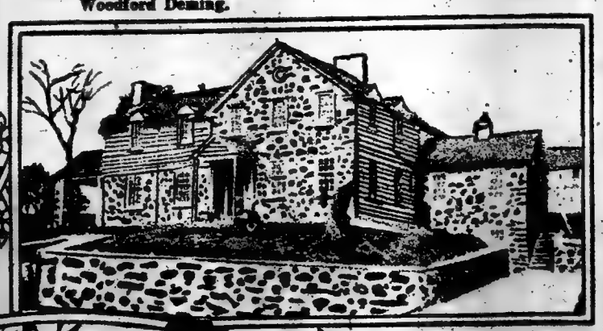
The Bronx is represented by apartment houses on East 156th Street and St. Ann's Avenue, and two two-family dwellings on Fish Avenue.

The New Blake Theatre on the northwest corner of Blake Avenue and Schenck Avenue in the Brooklyn parcel included in this sale.

Staten Island is represented by forty-seven improved New Dorp lots on Amboy Road, Belfast and Vincent Avenues. Forty-five acres on Tarrytown Road and White Plains Road, Tarrytown, N. Y., will also be sold.

Factory Fire Drills.

Section 270, Par. 2, of the New York State Labor Law requires "In every factory building over two stories in height in which more than twenty-five persons are employed above the ground floor, a fire drill shall be conducted at least once a month, in which all of the occupants of the building shall participate simultaneously and which shall conduct all such occupants to a place of safety.



Residence Nearing Completion in California Ridge, East Chester, N. Y., on the Projected Hutchinson River Parkway.

NEWARK SITE IS SOLD.

Mono Service Company Buys Oraton Street Property.

The property at 301 to 351 Oraton Street, Newark, N. J., having a frontage of about 700 feet on Oraton Street with an average depth of 190 feet to the tracks of the New York and Newark branch of the Erie Railroad, has just been acquired for additional expansion by the Mono Service Company, who have for a number of years operated their business in the two-story building located at 303-31 Oraton Street. This was their original unit and covered about 30,000 square feet. About seven years ago the Mono Service Company purchased the property at 321-29 Oraton Street at the northeast corner of Verona Avenue and built there a modern two-story and basement reinforced concrete building which they thought would take care of their needs for a very long period. Their business has been rapidly growing, with the result that they are now completing on a portion of the plot just purchased through Feist & Feist, Inc., a new unit which will give them an additional 43,000 square feet of floor space, it being three stories in height with ground dimensions of approximately 112 by 140. This, with the other buildings on the plot, gives them a total of about 160,000 square feet of covered manufacturing quarters. With the acquisition of the new plot, which has a frontage on Oraton Street of 765 feet, the Mono Service Company completes a frontage on Oraton Street and the railroad of about 1,325 feet.

ARTS SHOW TO HAVE MODEL HOMES DAY

Mrs. Gregory Will Explain Work of Women's Federation in the Movement.

Model Homes Day will be one of the features during the second week of the Architectural and Allied Arts Exposition opening at Grand Central Palace Feb. 21 under the auspices of the Architectural League of New York.

A special exhibit of small house plans, photographs and models of model gardens and the things which go to make up the model home will be among the features.

Mrs. Charles R. Gregory of New Rochelle, Chairman of the American Home Department of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, will be one of the speakers on the program planned for that day. She will discuss the federation's movement to emphasize the importance of the art of homemaking. She will explain the federation's work in erecting an ideal home and furnishing it for exhibition purposes as an inspiration to women.

BUILDING COURSE.

Lecture Term in Management at Columbia University.

The third Spring season course in building management at Columbia University under the auspices of the Building Managers and Owners' Association will begin Feb. 2, 1927.

The lecturers and topics have been selected with great care, the aim being to present the important subjects appertaining to building management by men who are not only experienced but are acknowledged experts.

The subjects have been chosen with the idea of presenting the fundamental principles of building management and will be grouped under four headings, namely, office buildings, loft buildings, apartment houses and general. The lecturer on each subject is a specialist. The schedule includes fifteen lectures and the class will meet at 7:40 P. M. in Room 411, Kent Hall, 116th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, every Wednesday evening during the term, the period to be one hour and fifty minutes.

Students may enroll upon application to the registrar, Room 315, University Hall. The cost is $30 for the session.

Among the lecturers will be Charles F. Merritt, Clarence T. Coley, M. Vincent Brady, Maurice R. Spear, William E. Britton, P. Palma Simon and Norman Denser.

OLD BROOKLYN SCHOOL GOING AT AUCTION

St. Leonard's Academy Will be Sold by J. R. Murphy on December 22.

Among the forthcoming auction offerings of James R. Murphy will be St. Leonard's Academy, Brooklyn, nearly half a century old, which has graduated many men prominent in New York City religious, civil and political affairs.

The academy, at 140 South Fourth Street, was founded in 1878 and was devoted to classical and commercial studies. Recent years have changed the character of the neighborhood, and many industrial enterprises have come into the vicinity. Consequently the Franciscan Brothers have transferred their activities to St. Francis College. The brothers have instructed Mr. Murphy to sell the property on Dec. 22 on the premises at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Murphy will sell on next Wednesday evening ninety-eight of the remaining unsold lots in Valencia Gardens, Massapequa, L. I., one block from the Merrick Road; private dwellings on Woodland Avenue, Bayside; a block front on Nassau Boulevard between 148th and 150th Streets, and Auburndale plots and other properties. The sale will be held in St. Michael's Hall, Madison Avenue, Flushing.

Next Friday evening, in St. John's Hall, Yonkers and Seminary Avenues, Mr. Murphy will sell, to close the estate of Thomas J. Lynch, a dwelling at the northeast corner of Yonkers Avenue and Slide Street and plots on Mile Square Road and Seminary Avenue.

REALTY BOND SELLING.

New Guarantee Method by Federal Service Corporation.

Selling land guaranteed under a bond which yields the buyer annual interest and indemnifies him against loss is a plan the Federal Realty Service Corporation has under consideration.

Announcement is made that it has retained former Attorney General Carl Sherman to analyze the proposed plan with respect to all legal details.

In explaining how such a bond would operate, W. Whitewright Watson, President of the Federal Corporation, stated that he felt nothing better could be created which would give the land buyer greater confidence in real estate investments.

"Buy Your Home" Show.

The fifth annual "Buy Your Own Home" exposition will be held at the Twenty-third Regiment Armory, Bedford and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, from April 2 to 9.

Photographs and models of homes will be shown and representatives of the builders, real estate developments and home equipment dealers will be in attendance to thoroughly explain the product for sale.

PROVIDE HOMES FOR PUBLIC GUARDIA

Builder Formulates Plan to Assist Police, Firemen and Letter Carriers.

David W. Kean, one of the [illegible] sections in the erection of one and two family homes in the suburban [illegible] tions of the city, has completed [illegible] of a plan to assist policemen and firemen in the city and postmen employed by the United States Government to buy homes. The plan is to be [illegible] in the sale of 400 two-family houses now being erected in the Throgs Neck section of the Bronx by the [illegible] Park Beach Realty Corporation, of which Mr. Kean owns.

Under the sales plan an initial payment of $1,000 is required. Mr. Kean proposes personally to loan any policeman, fireman or postman who does not have as much as $1,000 for the initial payment from 90 to 98 per cent of the amount. He will take back a first mortgage for the amount loaned for a period of ten years without amortization or interest for the first five years. This will enable the home buyer to pay off the instalment payments which become due after the first five year period.

He also announces that the mortgages which he takes back for the sums loaned in this manner to policemen, firemen or postmen will be turned over as a donation to the pension funds of the departments in which they are working.

"My experience in selling hundreds of homes in the past five or six years has taught me that few of the policemen, firemen and letter carriers earn more than $2,000 a year and are glad to take advantage of the opportunity offered for sale in the different sections of the city because their savings are not sufficient to allow more than $1,000 to make the necessary initial payment," said Mr. Kean. "I am sure that there is no class in the city more entitled to a home of their own than those who appreciate the advantage of not only owning more than they pay but who love to do my part in assisting them to own their homes.

The homes offered by the Throgs Neck Park Corporation are two-family brick houses with all modern improvements. Streets, sewers, sidewalks, curbing and other improvements in front and rear of the houses are installed and paid for by the company. The purchaser pays no taxes except taxes, water rent and interest, the total cost of which will not exceed $234 per year for the two-family houses, which have five rooms and bath apartments of four and five rooms.

RENT LAW STATUS.

Hold-Over Tenants Liable for a Year's Lease.

Stewart Browne, President of the United Real Estate Owners' Association of New York, in a statement issued to owners last week on the present status of the rent laws, points out that "leases of houses constructed since September, 1926, irrespective of what rents they pay, can be disposed of for any reason and without being obliged to give a reason.

"Can be forced to give a lease disposeessed. If suit for rent, or dispossess proceedings brought for agreed-upon rent of $25 per month per room, they can set up defense of 'unreasonable rent.'

"Any month-to-month tenant who vacates prior to the end of his month can be sued for the entire year's rent.

"Any tenant under a lease, negative of the rent amount, who holds over one or more days beyond the expiration of his lease and tender next month's rent and the landlord accepts it, the tenant becomes a month-to-month holdover and is liable for another year's rent as reserved in the lease, whether he continues in possession for the entire year or not.

"The rent laws and amendments possess amendments continue to apply to tenants if the rent is under $30 a month per room.

"Any tenant paying less than $30 per month per room and whether in an old or new building can, after six months immediately after the expiration of his term in each year, set up an 'unreasonable-rent defense' and can set up the same defense if the landlord raises the rent.

"Any tenant paying over $30 a month per room cannot set up any unreasonable-rent defense.

"The rent laws and the [illegible] dispossess amendments do not apply where the rent is $30 and upward per month per room."

TENTATIVE SKETCH OF MOTOR HIGHWAY TO BE BUILT ALONG THE NORTH RIVER

Surveys have been practically completed and borings are now being made by the city engineers for the proposed elevated motor highway which is to run along the North River waterfront from Canal to Seventy-second Street.

A bill authorizing the construction of the highway was signed by Governor Smith last Spring. The necessary funds for its construction are to be raised entirely by assessments levied upon property owners in Manhattan.

The roadway is to be 65 feet in width, or 5 feet wider than Fifth Avenue, allowing ample room for express traffic in both directions. Its length will be about four miles.

A speed of thirty miles an hour or better will be permitted. It will thus be possible for automobiles to cover the distance between Seventy-second Street and Canal Street in ten minutes or less, which is considerably faster than the average speed of the elevated or subway service.

This broad, uninterrupted highway will be open to all manner of traffic. It will link together, incidentally, the piers that extend for four miles along the west side of Manhattan and will eliminate the dangerous grade crossings of the railroad tracks along the waterfront. It will, in a sense, create two wide thoroughfares for traffic, which will be carried respectively on the street level and on a tier above.

According to Borough President Miller's plan, the express highway will be twenty feet above the street level, affording ample clearance for surface traffic.

The structure itself will be of steel, but will be covered with cement as a protection. The general design, it is said, will be simple but graceful.

The sixty-five foot width will provide accommodation for six lines of traffic, three in either direction. It is proposed to have two traffic lanes at the centre for slow-moving vehicles and two lanes on either side for the faster cars.

All cross-traffic will be eliminated, thus permitting an even flow of north and south bound vehicles. It is estimated that the four lanes devoted to express traffic will each accommodate about 1,000 vehicles an hour, while the slower lines of traffic will handle about 500 in the same period.

The six lanes will thus provide for about 5,000 cars hourly, passing in both directions, which is more than twice the capacity of Fifth Avenue.

No street or avenue in New York at present enjoys complete freedom from cross-traffic. On Broadway, Fifth Avenue and other busy thoroughfares north and south traffic must be brought to a standstill every few minutes to permit the flow of east and west bound traffic.

This will not be the case on the new elevated highway at any point, since traffic will enter and leave on the same side by an ingenious system of ramps leading upward from the street level at easy grades.

These ramps will be nearly two blocks long and will emerge at the centre of the express roadway, thus eliminating crossover traffic. The ramps will be placed parallel to the main structure and will not interfere with the street-level traffic below.

The present plans call for ramps at Canal, Christopher, West Fourteenth, Twenty-third, Thirty-fourth, Forty-second and Fifty-seventh Streets. It will, therefore, be possible to leave or enter the express highway at convenient intervals.

The ramps will provide access to the important cross streets leading to docks and ferries. Cars will be able to travel from Seventy-second Street and Riverside Drive to the important docks and ferries in from five to ten minutes.

The elevated roadway will also greatly reduce the congestion that now clogs West Street in the vicinity of the piers and ferry slips. Though the highway is intended primarily for fast vehicular traffic, a sidewalk three feet wide will be provided for pedestrians.

MAMARONECK

It has been firmly established that the safest investment in the world is real estate in or around New York City. Westchester County offers to the homeseeker not only a sound money investment, but the finest suburban area in the world in which to live. Its lake regions rival the famous lakes of Killarney, and its park system, when completed, will be second to none.

Mamaroneck, with its waterfront advantages, offers more inducements to the homeseeker than any other locality in the county, within twenty-five miles of New York City. Some bargains we have in offer are:

Seven-room house $12,000
Seven-room house and sun parlor 14,000
Seven room and sun parlor with large stone chimney $14,500
Two-family house, five rooms in each apartment 16,000

These houses are all situated in first-class neighborhoods, on large plots of land, and can be bought with an average payment of about $1,000, and the balance can be paid for monthly.

gage lender, after the war, to come out boldly to support the new scale of costs. He had the vision, good judgment and foresight to accept the then existing price basis as being of a permanent character and as a result the Metropolitan was the first company to come to the aid of the housing shortage, which also proved a good business stroke because it received the cream of loans at good rates. Other life insurance companies and savings banks finally followed the Metropolitan's lead.

Three Essential Factors.

"In the final solution, the housing outlook for 1927 depends on three basic factors. (1) Mortgage money. (2) Tenants. (3) Investors. Financing is always the first consideration in a building problem. With sufficient mortgage money, enough tenants to fill houses and make them pay, and investors eventually to take over the propositions, the builder has only to erect a well-planned, carefully-worked-out project on good transit to meet all demands. With competition from high-priced buildings curtailed, the outlook for 1927 in the low-rent field is the brightest in years."

CITY HALL PARK AS SEEN IN 1834.

Aldermen Commended for Replacing High Board Fence With Neat Iron Railing.

Interest in and around City Hall Park during recent years has been concentrated chiefly upon the tall buildings erected in its environs, the number of which is being increased by the towering structure on the southwest corner of Broadway and Barclay Street, long graced by the northerly portion of the famous Astor House.

Nearly a century ago, however, the park itself was undergoing reconstruction, the City Fathers showing a broader appreciation of its proper dignity and beauty in the life of the city. The editor of the entertaining New York Mirror on May 31, 1834, thus describes some of the agreeable changes recently made on that famous plot of city property:

"If the Aldermen and assistants who have recently given up the administration of our municipal affairs had done no other good thing in the term of their government, they would have entitled themselves to the gratitude and good-will of their fellow-citizens simply by the judicious measures they have taken for the improvement of that undefinably shaped piece of corporation property which lies around the City Hall. There seems to be, at last, a prospect of its becoming what it ought to be—an ornament to the city.

"We begin to take courage as we cross from Broadway to Chatham Street of a morning, and in a little while we shall leave off putting ourselves to trouble in changing the conversation when 'the park' is mentioned by some critical foreigner or Bostonian, open-mouthed, in descanting upon the supremacy of his own 'Mall,' which, by the way, has been flung in the teeth of New York any time these eighteen or twenty years.

"The park is actually getting to be decent. The iron railing that was put up ten or twelve years ago was something; but until very lately there was a vile patch of contemptible wooden pickets on the Chatham Street side, from nearly opposite Frankfort Street to the jail; and beyond that a high board fence, such as are used in the construction of cattle pounds in the country. Now it is all iron, and the sight rejoices our eyes. Then, again, they have taken away those infamous whitewashed posts, and long stripes of narrow plank with which the sides of the footways were decorated, and put up in their stead neat locust posts of uniform shape and size, connected by iron chains, and this is a special good deed. Moreover, somebody has begun to look after the grass.

"The trees, too, are beginning to give promise. The corporation has hitherto been unfortunate in this item; saplings, with out number, have been planted, year after year, but they all would die. The last batch, however, look as though they intended to flourish; we have detected but one dead fellow as yet, and the others seem thriving and vigorous, and we begin to have hopes of a respectable grove in the course of the next fifteen or twenty years."

SEES MORTGAGE BONDS AT TWO-BILLION MARK

Business Will Reach Big Investment Total in Ten Years, Says M. Lloyd Bowen.

A $2,000,000,000 investment will be represented by the first mortgage real estate bond business within ten years, it was predicted yesterday by M. Lloyd Bowen, Vice President of the Leverich Bond and Mortgage Corporation.

This forecast was made in connection with the announcement of publication by the Leverich corporation of an analysis in booklet form, which discusses first mortgage bonds.

The soundness of the large majority of the first mortgage bond houses was credited by Mr. Bowen as being responsible for the growth of the industry to its present state, with a billion dollars already invested. The same factor, he believes, will bring about the doubling of the volume of business within a decade.

"When a business such as the first mortgage real estate bond business becomes so gigantic," he declared, "it has a real bearing on the prosperity of the nation as a whole.

"The billion dollars already invested which has financed construction of apartment houses, office buildings, hotels and commercial structures, has provided compensation for thousands of persons. Not only do the workmen receive pay, but contractors, engineers, architects and various affiliated classes participate.

"Further than this, when a business reaches these proportions, it is evidence of the essential soundness of the great majority of the firms engaged in it. This business, taken as a whole, shows an unexcelled record of safety, and I feel quite certain that few comparisons in the investment field can show this same record of achievement in respect to protecting the investor's funds."

FEWER U. S. PENSIONERS.

Below 500,000 for the First Time in Thirty-five Years.

A decline in the number of pensioners on the Government rolls below the 500,000 mark occurred during the month of October for the first time in thirty-five years, according to a report made by the Pension Bureau to the Secretary of the Interior recently. The report gives the number of pensioners at 499,622, and shows that 1,281 veterans and 1,418 widows of the Civil War died during the month, thus terminating their pensions.

A steady decline has been occurring in the roll of the Pension Bureau during the last twenty-four years. The greatest number was in 1902, when there were 999,446 soldiers and widows drawing pensions from the Government. Since then there has been a gradual falling off until the roll was reduced to 501,723 at the end of the fiscal year 1926.

OUTLINES FACTORS IN FLORIDA GROWTH

Agriculture, Manufacturers and Tourist Travel Cited by Railway Executive.

PRESENT CONDITIONS GOOD

Opportunities Exist for Many Industrial Activities—Railroad Facilities Extended.

Among the many factors giving assurance of well sustained future growth in Florida are the development of its great agricultural resources and increase in tourist travel, H. N. Rodenbaugh, Vice President of the Florida East Coast Railway Company, recently told the members of the Florida State Chamber of Commerce.

"The value of Florida agricultural products in the last fifty years has increased more than 25 per cent. over the increase in value of agricultural products produced by the whole United States within the same period," said Mr. Rodenbaugh. "Only slightly over two million acres of land are now devoted to fruits, vegetables and general farming, while it is stated, from official sources, that about twenty million acres are available within the State for such purposes.

"Florida's agricultural prosperity will not only increase because additional acres are brought into cultivation, but, because a more intensive system of farming will be adopted which will bring a greater production per dollar invested. The results of the close study now being given to agricultural improvement are being critically examined by progressive farmers, who will profit through making use of the work of the capable experts who are devoting their lives to this constructive work.

"Florida is not usually regarded as a manufacturing State, yet its income from manufacturing ranks second in the list of groups of principal sources of revenue within the State. But even with this fact before us, it is clear that manufacturing is probably the least developed industry in Florida in comparison with the possibilities. Many kinds of manufacturing would not thrive here, but there are, undoubtedly, a number that would, and the present problem is to determine what they are.

"Florida has every promise of a brilliant future. In the rapid growth of the last ten years, no factor has appeared that gives any reason to fear that what has been done has been built upon a weak or unstable foundation. The conditions which surrounded the recent rapid expansion might well have stimulated the birth and development of elements that could injure or destroy the structure that has been so hopefully erected. None is present, however, and today Florida stands upon a pinnacle triumphant over almost overwhelming adversities, and confident of her strength to meet and conquer the obstacles that will confront her in her steady march to even greater heights than she ever dreamed of a few short years ago.

"Probably the most important factor of the many which give assurance of sturdy and substantial growth is that which relates to the tourist movement. The proportion of people who do come here, as compared with those who could come, is still very small. Means should be found to attract the many who do not now come.

"The transporting of tourists is a more delicate, a more exacting, type of railway operation than is the case in a territory where the passenger movement is relatively uniform throughout the year. This special type of service demands a railway machine that is built and operated along modern and ample lines. Florida is peculiarly fortunate in this respect, as her several railway systems have spent huge sums of money, in recent years, to enlarge and to modernize their properties, so that they are now far ahead in capacity of the immediate requirements and are adequately equipped with cars, locomotives and safety devices."

FLEETWOOD HILLS

Removed from the City's Clamor —And Far from its Rentals

These apartments, located in the attractive hills of Westchester, overlook the Bronx River Parkway, its woods and winding stream.

The rooms are larger, with various color schemes for you to choose from—every closet is cedar lined—fire places that burn natural logs—electric elevators—individual garages—these are only some of the features.

And being in this peaceful country environment and with such moderate rentals, these apartments should certainly be given your earliest attention.

3 Rooms: $1150 to $1450

A few exceptional 4 and 5 room apartments still remain. They are most attractive—as are their rentals.

At Fleetwood Station, Harlem Division, New York Central; 28 minutes from Grand Central, one mile south of Bronxville.

THE STRUGGLE.

"I dreamed of love and quietness,
A cabin hearth and orchard land.
I woke to life * * * and life had thrust
A sword within my hand."

Life's objective is not easy to discern. Sometimes it seems to be security, peace, safety, but always there is that impetus which will not allow us to cease fighting.

Life is combat. If you need assistance in the struggle to obtain a congenial office position, insurance or commercial, call on us.

SECURITY SALESMEN.

Unusual Opportunity to get into the PUBLIC UTILITY FIELD.

The Most Profitable, Secure and Popular Investment Today.

More individual investors are buying the securities of public utilities than any other investment; in order to make money salesmen must sell what the public is buying.

Our offering is something free from all kinds of competition—for which there is no substitute—a business thoroughly regulated and controlled, that is not affected by business depression—a business which must increase as fast as our country grows, and which, at all times, to all people alike, serves a demand which can never change and never grow old.

This is a strong financial institution that is noted for its successful investments and its policy of protecting the interests of its clients and employes; we are handling a high-grade public utility issue with profit-sharing features.

We invite the inquiries of men who are now seeking a permanent connection with a house that is constantly adding to its clientele as a result of its successful investments.

Our salesmen are given eight direct leads every day.

Remuneration on a commission basis, which enables a man to increase his income in proportion to his capabilities.

Will also consider applications for representatives in open territories outside of the metropolitan district.

Kindly write or call Director of Sales, 57 William St., New York, Office 1609, or telephone John 3330 for appointments.

Salesmen Wanted.

SECURITY SALESMAN FOR CONNECTICUT.

Well-known New York financial house has opening for a real security salesman to represent it in Connecticut. We deal in seasoned stocks of established financial institutions and among others are offering dividend paying preferred and common stocks of a successful financial investment trust.

The man we want is one who has been accustomed to earning at least $10,000 a year. We don't want the professional stock salesman, who is looking for a quick clean-up. We pay no drawing accounts and all remuneration is strictly on a commission basis.

We offer a permanent worthwhile connection to a man possessing a friendly personality; a clean record, and who can sell securities of proven merit.

Write for individual and confidential appointment, giving full information and phone number if possible. W 667 Times Downtown.

SECURITY SALESMEN.

These are the "high spots" of our proposition:

1. Plenty of live, direct leads from the right people.
2. A "boss with a heart," who knows exactly what real cooperation means to salesmen and how to give it.
3. A common stock that sells readily because there are no reasons why it should not.
4. A commission large enough to make it pay from the salesman's standpoint, without being unfair to his client.
5. A congenial lot of fellows to work with, under conditions made to order from the standpoint of permanency and stability, for years to come.

Don't write "a book" in reply, but do tell us enough so that we will know you really mean business. There will be no delay in getting started—no red tape.

W 663 Times Downtown.

SALESMAN.

The largest concern in its line is opening district offices in New York and is desirous of employing a limited number of salesmen for this territory.

We are seeking a man who has real ability to sell and who wants to make his next position his life work. There is absolutely no competition in our line and sales resistance is at a minimum, however, our product is not easily sold. For that reason the remuneration is correspondingly high.

Experience in our line, which is all types of lubrication, is unnecessary as we train our men, put them into the territory upon a liberal commission basis and as they are assigned permanent territories they are given a substantial salary and bonus.

Your advancement in our organization is put strictly up to you, and the growth of our organization is just as rapid as we are able to develop man-power. Therein lies your opportunity if you can furnish satisfactory references and are willing to work to gain success.

Apply Sales Manager, Room 1408, at 452 Lexington Av.

SALESMEN (2).

Only a few weeks ago we employed Messrs. Avery and James. They have demonstrated their adaptability and will shortly be placed in charge of offices in Southern Ohio and California.

Two vacancies to fill. We want men who can sell, employ and train other men to sell; in fact we need real potential sales managers. The men should be over 26 years old, earnest, well educated, of excellent appearance and willing to leave New York. They should also be broadminded enough to know that real selling is on a commission basis.

We sell a sales service. We are operating in an exclusive field; no competition.

If you know that you can meet our requirements, tell us so in your first letter. All communications confidential. R. 257 Times.

SALESMEN.

Could you handle a position getting people to save money instead of trying to sell them something?

Do you think you could interest two people to save $12 per week with an old reliable bank in order to earn $00 in commissions? If you have been fairly successful in your business and are desirous of a change into a line that has no seasons; that will live long after you and I are gone, that can give you an earning for 10 years on every account opened, where you have nothing to sell but the idea of protected savings—call on our sales manager and learn of the new unique plan for saving money and you will be amazed at the simplicity of our proposition. Be prompt. Come at 11 sharp Monday, or phone Wisconsin 1092 for appointment. Thrift Deposit Plan, 140 West 42d.

SALESMAN, SPECIALTY.

I am looking for a young man, over 28 and under 38 preferably, whom I can train to represent my organization in the East.

This chap has cut his eye-teeth selling specialties and he is longing for a REAL OPPORTUNITY—not just another job. He appreciates that "Selling is 90% Perspiration and 1% Inspiration." During his incubation period he sold securities, books, advertising or some intangible under resistance. Although our work does not come under the above classifications and is not house to house or knick-knacks, we value the experience and training gained by such methods.

Primarily, I want a man who has a GOAL—a two-fisted HE-MAN who wants to go somewhere and be somebody in 1927. Degrees don't count! Clever conversation won't impress me; but good past experience, ambition and courage will!

We sell chief executives a practical, profitable, proven plan that will produce greater net profit in 1927 by energizing personnel and reducing overhead.

Liberal commission, permanent connection and assured executive future.

In replying give full and complete information covering past 5 years, age and telephone number to insure quick action. Address R 294 Times.

THREE MEN WANTED.

IN THE last 5 years have you advanced rapidly in your work, and do you find yourself now in a dead-end job? Must your further advancement wait until some one ahead of you passes on or up?

AND ARE you willing to wait 5 years more on your present job before you can have the opportunity to earn the amount of money you really need—and must have soon?

WE HAVE openings for three men; they must be well educated, of pleasing personality, and above all of character, stability and ambition; preferably they are married and are between 25 and 40 years of age.

TO EACH man a prominent company offers an exceptional opportunity, thorough training for the work he is to do, and numerous selling aids, including national advertising leads.

IF YOU have ability, energy and the courage to work hard for a real future, here's your chance to get into the life insurance business under most advantageous conditions on a basis which offers more than a cold commission contract.

CALL UPON Mr. Cowen, 2 o'clock, Monday or Tuesday, or phone for an appointment.

PHOENIX MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
100 EAST 42D ST., ROOM 316.

SALESMEN,
NEVER AGAIN!
If you are one of the five men we are looking for you will never again have cause to read the Help Wanted columns.
We will establish you in YOUR OWN BUSINESS—a highly respected and very remunerative one; associate you with a selling organization which last year ESTABLISHED A WORLD'S RECORD—an organization that will thoroughly train you and supply you with "real live leads" and selling helps that will mean LARGE COMMISSIONS TO YOU.
YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF to find out if you meet our requirements and to get full particulars of how and why our associates are so successful in selling life insurance ON A NEW AND DIFFERENT BASIS.
Don't simply think about it—but ACT. Get in Monday or Tuesday for an interview with our Mr. C. Lamont Post.

for BRAZIL.

A prominent manufacturer of talking machines requires the immediate services of an American, about 30 years of age, who has traveled extensively in Brazil and made a successful sales record there; he must be able to expertly speak and write Portuguese.

Position offers excellent opportunity for advancement.

Traveling expenses will be paid, also adequate salary.

In reply, fully outline commercial experience, education; give references, &c.

If you are not an American who has spent some time in Brazil, please do not waste your and our time by writing us.

Address T71, P. O. Box 3407,

A REAL SALESMAN?

A large manufacturer of asbestos products that are sold exclusively by appointing dealers, interviewed one hundred salesmen (?) in the last week in order to secure the services of two real, hard hitting, experienced salesmen.

We sought men who had sold the "intangibles," such as advertising services, or specialties. We required that type of salesman because he would be able to overcome more than the average sales resistance, and in doing so—he would be able to CLOSE on the FIRST interview.

We found Those Two Men. They are both hitting—and are Making Good.

Now—We Need Two More Men Like Them.

Can you qualify? If so—a successful selling plan will be shown you—and if you do not object to traveling, we will offer you a permanent connection—and substantial drawing account—We want men who have earned $15,000 yearly.

Apply Suite 1610, 475 5th Av.

MEN.

I need two men with proven sales records and with determination, personality, ability to handle men, to help me with sales campaign of national extent; large and immediate earnings on commission, starting immediately, for the men I accept; our concern is the largest and oldest real estate concern in America; your chance for advancement is unequaled anywhere; permanent connection; 100 per cent cooperation.

BILTMORE SHORES

The $15,000,000 Fox-Frankel Development

TRACY, PEARL & CO.

The merger with the Frankel Sales and Development Corporation acquires for us the exclusive selling agency of the finest development project appealing to the masses on Long Island.

Every one connected with the real estate selling field knows Biltmore Shores and the high character of development that it is. The public generally has been fully informed about Biltmore Shores and it is undoubtedly a fact that no other development on the South Shore has won the recognition and admiration of people as has Biltmore Shores. Public confidence in the integrity and enterprise of the developers, William Fox and Joseph Frankel puts Biltmore Shores in a class by itself as a sound investment.

Biltmore Shores today, with more than $1,000,000 actually spent in the construction of an ocean-going canal waterway system, miles of macadam boulevards, curbs, roads and sidewalks, the installation of water and electricity, a community house and many finished homes, represents a development where the improvements are not merely contemplated but really completed.

Taking over the selling of Biltmore Shores means an enormous expansion on our part. We are entering immediately upon a big selling campaign and require at once high-calibred men to augment our present force.

Very favorable arrangements made with the land owners enable us to offer to salesmen the highest commission yet paid in selling this property. The same type of cooperation and selling methods that have helped our men to quickly and successfully sell our properties, Deauville Gardens, Deauville Park and Deauville Beach, will be offered on this proposition. We believe that more men have made more money regularly with us than in any other similar organization, and that Biltmore Shores will bring greater rewards now than have ever been possible before.

SALESMEN—This is your opportunity to learn something of the spirit that animates this organization and how we make it possible for you to earn big money. Call all hours.

LARCHMONT-ON-THE-SOUND.

Here is an opportunity that comes but seldom to purchase a new, large, spacious, well planned Spanish villa of stucco construction with tile roof, having 9 rooms, 3 baths, 2-car "built-in" garage, and incorporating such features as a tiled kitchen, tiled baths; oil burner, brass plumbing, copper leaders and gutters, and all such things as tend to make this home one of permanence and practicability. It is located on a wide street in a fine, highly restricted park within a few minutes' distance to the school, shopping centre and station. A large first mortgage permits of convenient terms, and the price has been reduced from $40,000 to $30,000. It will certainly pay you to investigate this home at once.

ALSO a fine example of English architecture in a new stucco house is offered at a sacrifice. This home is of stucco construction with a rugged slate roof, and has 7 rooms, 2 baths, sun parlor, open porch, tiled kitchen, pantry and "built-in" heated garage. The price has been reduced to $17,500 for immediate sale.
